GROUP DISCUSSION IN SECONDARY EDUCATION

An indication of progress in education is the resourcefulness of teachers and administrators in overcoming present obstacles. The critical period of the last few years has been a challenge to both individual initiative and coöperative endeavor. Many outstanding examples could be cited of how school people have met this challenge. Perhaps the most significant one in the secondary-education field is the new group discussion movement.

Group discussion among school people is far from a new idea. But recently there has been an unique development along this line in secondary education. Many small discussion groups have sprung up in different parts of the country. The Department was quick to recognize the importance of this movement and has done everything possible to encourage it.

The procedures of these groups are very informal and democratic. The groups hold regular meetings during the school year, endeavor to find out the most acute problems and needs of education both for their own communities and for the nation as a whole, pool the results of experiences in solving such problems, carry on experimentation and coöperative research, and present a unified attack on the issues and problems of secondary education. They keep in touch with the local and national movements, projects, and studies and coöperate with other agencies working in the secondary field. They emphasize planning in their own localities and try to coördinate their endeavors with the long range, national planning under way at the same time.

The Committee on Planning, appointed by the Department of Secondary-School Principals at the 1936 meeting in St. Louis, hopes that the Department might extend helpful services in a number of ways. The much repeated suggestion that certain problems should be studied by coöperative endeavor has crystallized into an initial project whereby the Committee has planned to prepare each year significant topics that may profitably be considered at some of the meetings of these discussion groups and other organizations affiliated with the Department.

Following the first meeting of the Committee, a letter was sent to leaders of these groups suggesting that topics be proposed which are of particular significance this year. From the large number of proposals received and from the trends of thought indicated in the accompanying letters, six topics or themes have been selected for the initial presentation. These six topics are:

- (1) Adapting the secondary-school curriculum to contemporary and developing life.
- (2) Creating public opinion on secondary-school affairs.
- (3) Making education for participation in civic life more effective.
- (4) Present obstacles to progress in secondary education and the first steps in overcoming them.
- (5) New needs and trends in educational guidance in secondary schools.
- (6) Education for safety in secondary schools.

These topics are necessarily of a general nature. Their different phases and inter-relationships involve most of the topics suggested in the total list as well as the most urgent problems and issues of secondary education. Of course they must be adapted to the situations of the particular locality of the group making use of them. However, they should not be dealt with as primarily local in their character. Their discussion should indicate the important trends and needs in secondary education for the nation as a whole. They should be approached in the light of approved principles of secondary education such as are developed in the Department Bulletin No. 59.

The discussion of such topics should contribute to: (1) Wider understanding of the larger problems of secondary education and of basic principles by which they may be solved; (2) New experimentation and investigations in secondary schools; (3) Immediate as well as ultimate influence on secondary-school procedures; and (4) A sense of solidarity, strength, and mutual helpfulness resulting from the fact that a large number of groups are working at the same time on the same problems.

Individual papers, round tables, panels, and studies are some of the many techniques which groups will wish to work out. The Department can provide examples of a group research-study on the Activities of Principals in Public Relations and What Pressure or Propaganda Groups Demand.

When groups make studies or arrive at generally approved results, it is hoped that tabulations or replies will be forwarded to the Department so that in the end a sufficient coverage will be achieved to be truly significant, and from which total reports and compilations can be made available as a highly meaningful service to all members of the Department.

In the light of the returns from the field the topics for ensuing years will be refined and improved so that the presentation will be more significant for group use. In the present instance it has seemed best not to offer too much detail or a too specific form but rather to allow for sufficient flexibility to induce experiment and criticism which should ultimately produce the most satisfactory techniques.

If your group is interested in the discussion of one or more of the six topics, write to the Committee on Planning, Department of Secondary-School Principals, 5835 Kimbark Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, and get the prepared plan on the topic or topics you wish to discuss. This suggested plan includes: (1) An introductory statement defining the topic and pointing out its significance at the present time; (2) Related or subordinate topics with suggestions for their presentation and discussion; and (3) A selected list of recent publications for reference in studying the topic.

THE ENGLISH CURRICULUM FOR LOW-ABILITY GROUPS AT EVANSTON TOWNSHIP HIGH SCHOOL

The causal situation—At the end of the second decade of the century, the Evanston Township High School faced the same problem that confronted secondary schools in general, especially those of population areas where college preparation had long been the expected thing. The depression forced the school to recognize that it was necessary to give an educational service not only to the college-preparatory people, but to an increasing number of pupils of a type which previously had gone to work without ever entering the high school, or which had stayed but a year or two after starting in the secondary school. The failure rate increased until the democratic functioning of the school was patently in question, and more important than failure rate was the question of desirable educational progress for pupils who obviously were not benefiting by traditional material.

Special low-ability classes—Of the possible ways to resolve the dilemma, the establishment of special curricula seemed the most feasible. Other perhaps more desirable programs from the point of view of educational philosophy would have necessitated so drastic a change in the purpose and management of the whole school that community support would have been problematical. The universality of English on the pupil's schedules and the close relationship between language function and general intelligence made English the logical place to start the specialized courses, to be known thereafter (and hereafter) as "X" courses. In September of 1931 five classes of first-year English "X" were organized to approach the problem from the point of view of the child rather than from that of the subject-matter. In view of the showing made by these first "X" classes, courses similar in intention were organized in the fall of 1932 for each of the four years of English.* The tabulation of September enrollment since that time reveals the growth and scope of the reorganized English classes.

*"X" courses in mathematics, science, and social studies have since 1932 been established. With industrial and domestic arts as a curriculum choice also, the "X" type pupil can, in general, fill his program with work adapted to his needs and interests. The subject of this paper is the English curriculum, which is typical in purpose and method.

ENROLLMENT BY TOTALS

September totals, 1932	15 sections	364 pupils
" " 1933	13 "	454 "
" " 1934	17 "	409 "
" " 1935	15 "	315 "
" " 1936	13 "	292 "

The reduction of the total number of "X" pupils by 162 since 1933 is partly the result of more experienced diagnosis of entering freshmen, partly of a more complete understanding on the part of teachers of the regular courses as to the kind of pupils who properly should be recommended for "X". Experience has warranted a policy, too, that children making their way successfully in other academic departments should be enrolled in regular English work. The principle of "All 'X' or No 'X,'" however, is costly in failure if applied without careful thought on individual cases.

The basis of pupil selection—The basis of selection of children for the "X" curriculum is that of fundamental need. No pupil is placed in an "X" course if it can be determined that he is capable of handling the regular schedule. Thus children are eliminated whose poor scholastic record is caused by remedial physical defect, temperamental maladjustment, or other factors amenable to correction. The selections are made through the use of intelligence and achievement tests and grade-school records. Occasionally a child is tested and removed from a regular course at the suggestion of the classroom teacher, though this happens less often after the freshman year. At the present time the Kuhlmann-Anderson test is used for intelligence, now and then supplemented by the Binet. For general grade level the Tiegs-Clark Progressive Achievement Test suffices. Chronological age is an important factor, as often a boy or girl should attempt the "X" work on a more mature level rather than to face a dubious success in the academic curriculum in competition with younger children.

Placement in an "X" course is not a perpetual consignment to inferiority, nor do the pupils generally feel that it is so. The door is left open for transfer to regular courses for the child who can demonstrate a mastery of the skills and knowledge prerequisite to those courses. It frequently happens that a youngster, imagining discrimination or stung by the ambition to get into college,* will by greater industry pull himself out of a border-line situation and make passing grades in the classes carrying college credit. When the motive becomes strong enough, persistent and apparently incurable habits of illiteracy are now and then overcome by the width of that ambiguous margin which distinguishes "pass" from "fail" in the conventional school situation. In no case is a child transferred except upon the recommendation of the "X" course teacher, or of the home room director (the pupil's chief adviser), and on the results of re-testing. In the case of pupils transferred out of "X," credit is given as of the course finally completed. The English "X" curricula do not attempt to meet the needs of children known often as the lazy-bright, and of those whose work suffers from poor study habits.

Remedial classes in reading have been set up from time to time, and much is made of such a course in the summer school. Pupils deficient in reading abilities are not only urged, but in some cases are assigned to the remedial summer course. Financial aid is often given to cases not otherwise able to do summer school work. The results of intensive summer school remedial work have been most gratifying. If it were not possible to do this type of instruction in summer school, it would unquestionably be given in the regular term.

Credits and marks—The four-year program in English "X" differs not at all from the college preparatory set-up in respect to promotions and graduation. Every assignment to an "X" course is made only after the signed consent of pupil and parent is obtained, which consent states that credits accumulated thereby shall be used only toward graduation from the high school.

The system of marks has been, to the present time, the same as that for other courses, with the designation "X" after the number of the final mark only.† Teachers of "X" groups use various schemes for recognizing achievement within the group. It has been found that the immediate recognition of the accomplishment is especially significant to such pupils. For example, an improvement indicated on a reading test in rate or comprehension brings much satisfaction to the pupil concerned, particularly if such progress is made known at once. For the permanent record few marks above 80X are given. Marks higher than that create an inference in the mind of the pupil that he is entitled to those recognitions of scholastic achievement accorded to the superior students of the school, and perhaps to college credits and transfer as well. Insistence to the contrary merely serves to thrust upon the child his differences, differences which it is fatuous to deny but cruel to sharpen. Every attempt is made to have the pupil feel a special opportunity within his reach, and at the same time not to divorce him too completely from the realities of the competition into which he will soon be thrust. The anomalies of the situation are all too apparent, and the school is now in the process of evaluating procedures toward a less arbitrary system of designations. It is well to emphasize that for these pupils the method of permanent records is of minor consequence. Remote values or measurements mean little. It is the day to day realization of accomplishment, however small, which is of real importance.

*"X" courses carry credit for graduation but not for college.

†For the permanent records Evanston Township High School has a numerical marking system using only five-point intervals, 70 as the passing minimum. The letter system is also used for certain types of marking. Each new mark on the child's record states a cumulative average.

The teacher-student relationship—The criteria for good teaching of an "X" group might be safely assumed; they are mentioned here to substantiate the assumptions. The talents of the "X" people are few, or at least they are not of the kind that find the English classroom the most perfect environment for expression. The teacher, therefore, must have resiliency of temperament, a high degree of ingenuity in practical matters, and a genuine interest in the kind of human beings he is handling. He must be able to establish in his own mind a satisfactory standard of growth for his low-ability pupils, and he must have the firmness to insist on their reaching that standard. Sentimentalism at once results in loss of control.

The teacher must avoid disparagement of either the work or of the child's attempts to do it. To be successful a teacher must have confidence that the special courses are an intelligently conceived though certainly not a perfected opportunity to help children who are eminently worth helping. Intellectual hauteur cannot touch the problem; only democracy of a high order can do so.

The kind of child who finds himself in the special courses offers personality problems of great variety. He may be of foreign parentage with consequent language handicaps, his home situation may be unwholesome, he may be, if he is a Negro, exceedingly sensitive to racial discriminations. Though he is older than the average high-school child of his grade, his actions and interests are often more childlike, his powers of sustained interest weaker. If he comes from a good home with cultural advantages and ambitions, he may have developed a deep resentment against school as a result of parental insistence upon an academic record he cannot achieve, or, what is almost certain, he has never tasted success in school, and never expects to do so.

It is natural for such children to crave a taste of prominence, obtainable through defiance of authority if in no other way. The "X" courses have therefore more than the usual number of children whose behavior record in the regular work was poor. Resentment ceases under circumstances which permit the pupil to exercise his abilities without feeling inferior to his classmates. The common argument that the dull child learns from the bright ones who naturally dominate the class gets no support from the experience that Evanston has had with segregated groups. In fact, once the class has settled into its stride, the "X" people in general show fewer inhibitions than one finds in many unselected groups. The response is more indiscriminative; interest is more easily roused even though harder to sustain. The child who was apathetic or obstreperous usually becomes in the "X" group coöperative and tractable.

The curriculum—General statement—It cannot be too plainly said that whatever the English department of Evanston Township High-School has done in regard to the materials and objectives of the four years of non-academic English has been done as an experimental departure from one set of values toward another. The purposes behind the traditional high-school courses are not valid for the kind of child whose needs the school is trying to meet in this instance. The new set of values, those which the department is moving toward, are defined by the nature and the environment of the special-case child as we find him, and also by that rapidly crystallizing body of educational thought which insists that the secondary school equip the pupil to cope with the present world as well as to appreciate the virtues of the past one, and which, in addition, does not concede that the first ability necessarily is a product of the second.

The problem of non-academic English at Evanston has definite limitations and restrictions; it is further complicated both by the comparative newness of the undertaking and by very practical considerations of money and supplies. It is a problem which is being attacked by classroom teachers facing handicapped children under conditions over which neither the teacher nor the administration have the degree of control they would like. Pupils, teachers, and circumstances are as they are, not pre-determined to prove something or other. So far as the set-up falls short of an ideal theoretical problem situation, just so far, perhaps, do the results to date fall short of what might be done under direction more surely calculated, with laboratory conditions and unlimited funds. To school administrators facing similar handicaps, the limitations of the Evanston experiment may be as significant as its attempted scope.

The curriculum—Its background—The first two years' work is remedial or corrective in its purpose. Few students assigned to the beginning course are without special handicaps in reading or writing, handicaps so severe that persistent, individualized treatment is prerequisite to any kind of reading expansion program. The reading tests occasionally score a first-year pupil as low as fourth-grade level. He has come through the grades into the high school, of course, solely because of age. The writing of "X" freshmen is usually far poorer than that expected of grade-school graduates. Two years' work makes fairly certain either that these first-year pupils will become literate enough to pass in regular classes, or that their best opportunities will lie in the continuation of the "X" curriculum. Few transfers are made to the regular courses after the second year.

Partly because of this original intention to make the "X" work remedial—a sort of catch-up device for ultimate transfer into regular courses—and partly because of the nature of the junior and senior courses whose materials had to be adapted to the "X" work, the first two and the last two years' programs were originally differentiated in their objectives and practices. They have remained so to the extent that mechanical habits must still be the prime concern of the first two years, not in the sense of conventional drill abilities, but as the functioning power to read and write.

A major fusion of points of view occurred in the spring of 1936, when the teachers of "X" courses agreed that a thinned-out college preparatory curriculum had little point for juniors and seniors who obviously could finish the secondary school only under special arrangement, and that the situation called for a new program of activities determined by a fresh concept of purpose. So far as money and ingenuity could provide new materials, they would be used; at least what the teachers were forced to use of the old could be approached from a different point of view. It was realized that such a program could not be found readymade, nor could it be built up on paper a year in advance, even with experience gained in teaching "X" courses. Consequently the curriculum for the last two years is now, in the fall of 1936, in a stage of evolution to which, may it be hoped, there will be no end.

The curriculum—Objectives—It is a truism to say that one's materials are less important than what one does with them. Unfortunately no statement of objectives can do much more than explain intentions, and on paper they are always good. More to the point, if less in detail, is a broad exposition of purposes, for they comprise a philosophy of education which colors every activity of the classroom, no matter how trite the purpose may seem in an outline.

Six general purposes lie behind the four year "X" curriculum:

First: To have each child according to his natural endowments reach his maximum of mechanical skill in reading, writing, speaking, and listening.

Second: To raise each child's reading tastes and preference to as high a level above the pulp publications as he is likely to maintain when he no longer has a teacher to direct him. It is better to make him a reader of The Saturday Evening Post than to try, and then fail, to make him a lover of Dickens.

Third: To give wide experience in the utility values of reading—of that reading which enables the citizen to be more articulate in a complicated world, which makes him aware of forces and events directly affecting his own well being. Such reading may range in objective from the ability to comprehend a railroad timetable to a knowledge of the subtle influences that control newspaper opinion.

Fourth: To acquaint the child with the conventions of written correspondence and to develop creative expression to the extent that the wish to write may be stimulated.

Fifth: To offer sufficient experience in speech situations to eradicate the common gaucheries of conversation and small-group presentations; not to attempt to train in a speech precision more academic than the high-school graduate requires.

Sixth: To develop the audience functions in regard to moving pictures and radio. Especially is it desirable to have the child feel his significance as a force toward improving the quality of advertiser-supported and box-office entertainment.

General practices—The purposes just stated almost inevitably lead to certain classroom practices and methods through which they can be realized. Never completely achieved, these are the goals in method:

First: All writing activity shall be for functional purposes, as opposed to arbitrary "theme" assignments. Such an intention presupposes that the activities of the class are productive of situations in which writing is normally and logically a part.

Second: All reading materials ultimately shall be chosen for their service to our adopted purposes rather than for literary quality or reputation. "Ultimately" refers to the necessarily slow accumulation and trial of suitable reading resources. Materials from the common cultural tradition will be chosen when they serve as well, and to the degree that knowledge of the common culture is defined as one of the objectives.

Third: Grammatical terminology shall have no place in any year of English "X" except as it may be used as common vocabulary and acquired by the student as such. Teacher usage will vary in that matter, but in no case is there an attempt to teach structure disassociated from immediate function.

Fourth: Even when common reading and writing is being done, the approach shall be as much as possible an individual one; work shall be planned as informally and as divergently as expertness and resources permit.

Fifth: Every effort shall be made to endow the class activities with purpose and "sense" in terms of the personnel of the class, to the end that participation shall be a voluntary rather than a disciplined thing. So far as is consistent with the major aims of the course, the children should determine what things they shall do.

Sixth: English language shall be treated as having functional properties, not only historical ones. Most of what the student does in his school career or his private life is subject to use in the English classroom. It is more than correlation or integration with other courses; it is identity, identity so far as possible without repetition. English is language in use about things that are, not just language which has been used about things that have been. Where practice falls short of the intention, responsibility must lie with strongly intrenched pedagogical conviction and habit, with the limitations of resources, and with the elaborate machinery of administration and departmental routine.

Materials—General—English department extra or supplementary book supplies are purchased in quantity by the department from a special fund created by pupil fees. These books then circulate on a schedule as "sets" of thirty or multiples of thirty through the rooms of the teachers who handle the work for which the books were bought.* These supplementary reading greatly reduce student costs for text books and at the same time provide a greater variety of titles.

The books of the regular courses, augmented by the fee allotments for the "X" curriculum and by meagre pupil purchases, constitute the common reading resources. For general reading and for books and magazines useful in topical or "investigation" work, the public library as well as the school library is of great assistance.

One problem constantly confronts the teacher of the low-ability pupil: what will tempt the child to read? Conventional guesses meet with small success. The child is too old, often too much experienced in the realities of poverty and unhappiness to have much use for books supposedly adapted to his school grade. On the other hand, his lack of power to read fluently and to grasp complex or abstract ideas blocks him from the enjoyment of books which his maturity would warrant choosing. Books in the Appendix bear toward that point.

Materials—First year—Available for the use of the I English X courses are these supplies:

DANIEL BOONE, Stewart Edward White, Allyn & Bacon; purchased by the department. The book is difficult reading for at least half the class. Fairly long assignments (about 20 pages) are given to teach grasp of the main idea of a paragraph and of a chapter. Constant use of the map, glossary, and notes is a reading habit easily taught by this book. The subject matter has value for character building discussions. The book is so masculine in its appeal that this year it is planned to supplement it with Bess Aldrich's A Lantern In Her Hand, for the sake of the girls.

ONE-ACT PLAYS, Helen Louise Cohen, Harcourt, Brace & Company; purchased by the department for second-year regular-course reading.* The "X" pupils read from it only "Pearls," "The Dear Departed," and "The Poor House." These they enjoy. The other plays are too subtle. The emphasis in the study of the plays is on understanding what happens. The special difficulties of the play form—the abrupt beginning, the acting directions, and the names of the speakers at the left—have to be considered and overcome. Everyone has a part in one walking rehearsal. The subject matter provides material for fruitful discussions from the standpoint of character building.

JIM DAVIS, John Masefield, Grosset & Dunlap; purchased by the department. The book is read rapidly for exercise in following a plot. It is a great favorite with the pupils, many of whom feel for the first time in its pages the fascination of a story that cannot be laid down until it is finished. Discussion of characters and development of an historical background are part of the study of this book.

*Sets of books mentioned as having been bought for circulation through the regular courses are available to the "X" curriculum in the semester during which they are not scheduled for those courses.

A MAGIC WORLD, Gordon and King, D. Appleton-Century; purchased by the department. A Magic World contains a good selection of poems both comprehensible and interesting to "X" freshmen. The prepared lessons in the appendix are helpful. The poems are used chiefly as practice material in turning words into pictures. The class learns to overlook the initial capitals and the line endings in an endeavor to find the meaning of the story or to see a picture. Oral reading with careful attention to logical breathing spots helps the pupils overcome the extra difficulty which poetry usually presents to their understanding. Some attention is given to rhythm, alliteration, and comparisons (never called figures of speech) as the extra enjoyments a poet can give the reader.

THE STORY OF A THOUSAND-YEAR PINE AND OTHER TALES OF WILD LIFE, Enos. A. Mills, Houghton Mifflin, Riverside Literature Series; purchased by the pupil. The book is well adapted to first lessons in visualizing and in reacting to other sensory impressions. The narrative element is so slight in most of the tales that short assignments for detailed study are feasible. Mill's vocabulary makes dictionary work imperative. The boys and girls both thoroughly enjoy the book.

NEW NARRATIVES, Blanche Williams, D. Appleton & Co., purchased by the pupil. This collection is used by the regular first year course in the study of the short story. This collection is the culmination of the reading course. Here all the skills acquired through the year are called into play. Attention is given to local color, to reasons for the characters' actions, to specialized vocabularies, to printers' signs; but the chief emphasis is on understanding what happened and on being interested.

ENGLISH AT WORK, Helen Rand, Henry Holt & Co.; purchased by the pupil. This composition book is particularly well adapted to the objectives of the "X" curriculum. It provides stimulus to thinking and oral and written expression in its early chapters. The latter part of the book furnishes drill material for our study of sentence structure.

STANDARD TEST LESSONS IN READING, McCall, Crabb, and others, Books III and IV, Teachers College, Columbia University; purchased by the department. The lessons are used first for drill in reading to answer detailed questions with perfect accuracy; later, with a time limit set, for drill in reading with both speed and accuracy. They have proved valuable in the four years we have used them. This year they are supplemented with Gates and Peardon's "Practice Exercises in Reading," Book V, Types A, B, and C, Teachers College, Columbia University. The work of the course includes extensive use of newspapers, magazines, pictures, and miscellaneous items which may be of service in a learning situation. Motion pictures* and radio are studied in the course with reference to current films and broadcasts. Some class discussion can be based on the short-subject films shown every few weeks at the school under the auspices of the Camera Club.

An exercise book or drill-pad was used for a year or two but found ineffective as a device to get writing power.

Materials—Second year—ADVENTURES IN AMERICAN LITERATURE, Schweikert, Inglis, Gehlmann, Harcourt, Brace & Co.; ninety copies of this book were bought with fee funds, thirty copies each of the book being put on permanent deposit in each of the three rooms where 2 English X was being taught. There they constitute a convenient source of reading, either for common study or for supplementary unit work. As the work of the course grows more diversified, the books become less important. They are used in class for poetry and for choral reading. These pupils read almost no poetry alone, but are interested in group work. The stories and essays are too subtle and difficult for the second-year "X" pupils.

SHORT PLAYS, Edwin Knickerbocker, Henry Holt & Co.; purchased by the department for the regular sophomore course. A few plays in the collection are suitable for "X." Four or five of the simpler ones are done in class with oral part-reading. The plays are used as the starting point for discussion of motion pictures.

SHORT STORIES FOR STUDY AND ENJOYMENT, Harold T. Eaton, Doubleday Doran; purchased by the department for the regular course. A few of the stories are adaptable to 2 English X. They seem too long to be read in one period, as much time as these second-year pupils give to a subject. This inability to finish the story causes loss of interest.

*A local theatre admits one hundred pupils and their teachers free of charge to each school-day four o'clock matinee.

THE WHITE HOUSE GANG, Earle Looker, Fleming H. Revell Co.; purchased by the department. This seems to entertain the pupils, and is effective for starting the work of the year. It is written in simple language, the chapters are short, the action is rapid, few explanations are given.

STORIES OF ADVENTURE, Max J. Herzberg, Allyn & Bacon; purchased by the department, with the needs of the "X" pupils in mind. The stories move rapidly, characters are few, climaxes are well marked, and adventure is the basis of the action. This book is decidedly a success.

ADVENTURE BOUND, Persing & Leary, Harcourt, Brace & Co.; purchased by the department. This is one of two books so far published by these authors for the express purpose of striking the level of the "X" child. The book is in use at Evanston for the first time in this, the fall of 1936.

ENGLISH AT WORK, Helen Rand, Henry Holt and Company; purchased by the pupil in his first year and kept for the second. The book offers situations within the comprehension of the children. The story quality of the book makes it more than a composition text. Its self-help features are commendable.

STANDARD TEST LESSONS IN READING—BOOK V, Columbia University; purchased by the department. These are excellent short selections for testing reading for speed, comprehension, meaning of words, judgment in drawing conclusions. An average of five to ten lessons a week through the year results in marked improvement in the mechanics of reading.

Magazines, newspapers, motion pictures, and radio, as in the first year. The use of a drill-pad was discontinued.

Materials—Third year—The materials listed for the last two years will be used in 1936-1937 only as they can function in the recently adopted but unfinished plan of reorganization.* The books are listed here with comments to show what is less successful with "X" courses as well as what proves more effective. The teachers of 3 English X and 4 English X are well aware that with the pressure of a full teaching schedule bearing upon them they will have to evolve their new courses (objectives as previously stated), not revolutionize them. It will be some time before detailed plans and resources for the 1937-1938 program for third and fourth year can be achieved. Meanwhile much of the old work serves in times of drought and famine.

ABE LINCOLN GROWS UP, Carl Sandburg, Harcourt, Brace & C.; purchased by the department. This book is still available, though its effectiveness is questioned. The Lincoln legend is familiar to the pupils, and the quality of the writing has no appeal to them per se. It is one of the evidences that only experience can predict what the maturer child of low reading ability is going to find entertaining or helpful.

GREEN MANSIONS, W. H. Hudson, Grosset & Dunlap; purchased by the department for the regular third year course. The style is obviously difficult for many 3 English X pupils, and the book may be dropped when the course becomes more independent of the college-preparatory resources. Little attention is paid to plot, none at all to symbolism. The value of the reading lies in Hudson's descriptions of plant and animal life in the idealized forest, of his visual re-creative power. For some reason there is, however, a strong carry-over of agreeable memory of the book to the fourth year on the part of many pupils.

LITERARY ADVENTURES IN A MODERN WORLD, M. David Hoffman, Harper & Brothers; purchased by the department. The material in this book is valuable for focusing present interests and arousing new ones as points of departure for individualized reading. On the one hand there are selections which deal primarily with achievement along the lines of science, invention, and travel; on the other hand, those which emphasize the personalities involved.

CONTEMPORARY PLAYS: AMERICAN, Watson and Pressey, Charles Scribner's Sons; purchased by the department for the regular third year course. These books have not been in general use for the "X" groups for a year or two, but one or two of the plays in the collection are of service to a few of the pupils, especially "The Beggar on Horseback."

EXPERIMENTS IN READING, BOOK II, McCall-Cook-Norvell, Harcourt, Brace & Co.; purchased by the department. These books are used with not so much success (Book I, that is) in, the second year, but in the third and fourth they interest pupils in their own capacities as readers.

HANDBOOK OF COMPOSITION, Woolley-Scott-Tressler, D. C. Heath & Co.; purchased by the pupil. This book is used largely as a reference, its intended purpose. Pupils are encouraged to achieve accuracy in writing and to use the Woolley as a constant guide to that end.

Magazines, newspapers, motion pictures, and radio programs are utilized as in other courses. More and more general reading is done as the shift in emphasis goes from subject-matter for its own sake and for its practice value toward more personally related ends.

Materials—Fourth year—A CERTAIN RICH MAN, William Allen White, Macmillan & Co.; purchased by the department. The book fulfills its purpose admirably as one of the common readings in which a high degree of control of the reading process can be managed. The type of discussion problems the book can lead into is obvious.

SCIENCE IN LITERATURE, Frederick Law, Harper & Brothers; purchased by the department. The articles are so varied that every pupil can find several things to his taste.

BUSINESS IN LITERATURE, W. H. Cunningham, Harcourt, Brace & Co.; purchased by the department. This book likewise serves well as a springboard into a wide choice of reading and talking activities related to the general subject named by the book.

AS YOU LIKE IT, Shakespeare, any edition, purchased by the department, or The Taming of the Shrew, any edition, purchased by the department. One class plans to read As You Like It; the other will use the Bacon-Kennedy edition (designed especially as a dramatic-production approach) of The Taming of the Shrew. The department has sets of each play. Much remains to be done toward presenting Shakespeare from the dramatic, rather than from the literary, point of view. The value of Shakespeare in the "X" course is still a matter of doubt.

EXPERIMENTS IN READING, BOOK III, McCall-Cook-Norvell, Harcourt, Brace & Co.; purchased by the department. See the note on third year materials.

Magazines, newspapers, motion pictures, and radio as in other courses.

SOCIAL BACKGROUNDS OF ENGLISH LITERATURE, Boas and Hahn, Little, Brown & Co.; purchased by the department. This is used as a handbook of literary locale, so to speak. Much individual work is done on topics relating to various active periods of English history and to great English personalities. As much as possible readings are taken from distinguished writers, or from writers dealing with the periods concerned. Much of the presentation consisted of interpretation by the teacher. At no time is there any attempt to make a chronological survey either of literature or of history.

Practices and Techniques—The construction of the four courses in "X" English, including the rather complete reconstruction now being undertaken in the last two years, has been essentially a process of trial and error participated in by teachers whose points of view and habits of work are by no means identical. Frequent conferences have prevented the repetition of mistakes and have assisted in the pooling of experience. As progress continues, the nine teachers involved will come constantly closer in their concept of the most desirable things for low-ability pupils to accomplish and of the best methods and materials to use in the process. Meanwhile the degree of success of any pedagogical innovation depends upon the teacher who organizes and applies it.

Thus there may be more point to a display of successful experiences than to an exposition of a common denominator of agreement. These quotations represent not general departmental practices, but rather the accounts of some few of the things that have been done and thought, quoted from the teachers who have done and thought them:

a. (Building reading power in low-ability first year pupils, by a teacher who helped to organize the "X" course in 1931).

"Pupils are encouraged to read all directions for exercises and tests silently. When they ask, 'What does that mean?' my usual reply is, 'Just what it says.' They visualize descriptions and actions in their readers. They turn words into mental pictures and learn to react to suggested sounds, smells, tastes, and feelings. For practice in visualizing actions they read silently a short paragraph telling a series of doings of one character. Then one pupil, without any spoken explanation or further reference to the printed paragraph, performs the actions. Other members of the class offer criticisms.

"There is definite vocabulary study. Six significant and presumably unfamiliar words are selected from the reading of the day or from the advance assignment. On the board these are printed, written, and also written in syllables. Their pronunciation and meanings are discussed. Pupils are asked to learn to spell them for the next day. In the class discussion or in written answers to questions on the story for the day, the pupils are encouraged to use the words listed on the board. Sometimes the pupils rather than the teacher supply the vocabulary list, each writing on the board six words which he looked up in the dictionary in preparing his lesson.

"A copy of the Winston Dictionary in each desk* has proved an excellent aid to vocabulary building. Individuals take considerable satisfaction in finding for the class the meaning of a difficult word. The children have made some 'dictionaries' of their own: a sailor's dictionary, one of horse talk, a boxer's dictionary, one for a favorite sport. Each kind was worked out in relation to the reading and discussion of the moment. The use of poetry makes close study of words necessary and not so hopeless as is such study in a solid page of print. A child may be expected to know the meaning of every word in a short poem.

"Every effort is made to overcome the active dislike for reading which in the typical "X" pupil is the natural result of inability to read. Materials that interest the pupils are used, successes are praised, difficult passages are recognized as such and worked out coöperatively by the class. The voluntary 'That was a good story' with which many pupils greet the teacher during the year is acknowledged by the teacher's enthusiastic 'I'm glad you liked it,' never by 'Why?' Through friendly guidance the teacher tries to put into the pupil's hands books which he can enjoy easily. Informal discussion is used in connection with short stories and plays in which ethical ideas are noticeable. We discover that reading can help us understand people and therefore get along with them happily. White's Daniel Boone conflicts with Mills' essays in the author's attitude toward hunting. From this we discover two sides to a question and we learn our own responsibility for passing judgment on an author's views.

"As an objective test of reading improvement I gave Gates's test in January and again in June to 36 pupils. 20 showed gains, 16 showed losses measured in school grades. The average gain was 1.92 reading grades; the average loss 1.03. The whole class made an average gain of 1.5 grades in slightly over four months. I am inclined to put more trust in other evidences of reading improvement. The pupils' greater eagerness to read, their growing pride in understanding precisely what the writer intended, their ability to enjoy longer and more difficult books give me a greater sense of accomplishment than do the test results."

b. (General comments on the management of "X" courses by a teacher of second-year low-ability pupils.)

"The assignments for "X" classes should be short, definite, mechanical. The pupils should do something about every assignment—answer questions in writing, make lists, fill blanks, write summaries, bring home-reading books to class or bring in magazines or selections from newspapers. Nearly every day the pupils should bring to class something upon which they can be checked. A skeleton plan of making assignments should be constant because these people do not adapt themselves easily; they lack flexibility. However, these pupils tire of everything very quickly and need a variety. To supply this it is well, along with the short, regular exercise type of lessons, to have interesting projects going on at the same time. It is not wise to give up a week or two weeks to a project; that is demoralizing. Too much lee-way is bad; some is essential.

"Reports to the class may be made often. They give the pupils the sense of accomplishment that they need. I have had pupils who had read rather widely and could talk intelligently on these subjects: railroad engines, steam ship engines, the construction of roads, nursing, archaeology, fashions, lumber, and music. E. S., whose father is a contractor, talked about the wood in our classroom. He told what kind of trees the floors and doors used to be. He had the class examining the mouldings as he explained where the knots are and what they mean. J. A., a Greek boy, read books on archaeology not only from the school library, and the town library but also from the Northwestern University library. The class listened with interest when he talked and drew designs and showed pictures. Betty B., a beautiful girl, made a well-organized book on the history of fashions. D. K. carried books on nursing and health about with her and became an efficient helper in the Health Department. L. N. could talk about orchestras.

"Panel discussions are usually as successful as anything else if they are carefully planned with a simple subject about which much may be said.

" 'X' pupils need practice in reading aloud, but they do not enjoy hearing each other read. Even plays on subjects that are interesting to them they read so poorly that they do not enjoy their own reading productions. Choral reading, as far as it has been used, has suggested a possible method. The chorus of voices gives confidence and training at the same time. Sophomores are not able to read with sufficient ease to enjoy stories that are grown-up enough to interest them, and yet they like very much to have stories told to them or read to them.

"What these pupils want to read is adventure and information. As a rule they seem to be more practical than imaginative. They seem to like best of all interesting facts: how fast airplanes can fly, how many automobiles are manufactured a year, how to make good coffee, how to deliver papers. Every so often the pupils may be asked to bring to class a magazine or a book and tell the class one interesting item found in each.

"Letting the pupils make their own books works well with some pupils. They can be asked to make the book they would like to read. This must not be a jumbled collection, as it will be unless constant direction is given. It is necessary to insist on classification and arrangement. The shorter articles in Popular Mechanics seem to be what is most interesting.

"Although my 2 English X pupils have about the same low mental ability as in previous years, I find a marked improvement in general morale. They are more attentive, more willing to cooperate, and prepare a brief assignment, more cheerful than before. I believe this improvement is present because these pupils have not met defeat once or twice in regular English classes with more capable pupils, but have been trained in an X English class with pupils near their own level of ability. This training has given them some confidence in themselves."

c. (An experienced teacher of third year "X" groups comments on the vicissitudes of his trade.)

"Saladin, the despotic sultan . . . ruled with love, and would have made a nearly perfect teacher of 'X' groups. The teacher must urge, exhort, mildly cajole his pupils toward The Great Desirable Goal of getting done the tasks (not necessarily teacher-set tasks) that seem desirable. The best (and I include the healthiest) teachers only should be assigned to 'X' groups.

"I take my materials wherever I find them. I have a classroom library to which, in the course of the semester, the pupils contribute and to which I contribute—all in the hope that some common meeting ground may be found for exchanging reading adventures. There is also an abundance of visual aids: posters, pictures (human and significant ones), articles. All of these things serve as motivating devices for composition; young people are happy to write, be it ever so little, when they have thoughts to convey, thoughts which are worth conveying. They differ not at all from their elders in that respect. On the other hand, how they despise those cut-and-dried 'vacation experiences,' 'theme for tomorrow,' '150-word theme' assignments!

"Stage-props must never be neglected: an honest-to-goodness dummy telephone somewhere in the room, a telephone to be answered several times a week. Let it be wired to a dry-battery bell, rigged up by one of the mechanically-minded, scientifically-minded boys—the kind one never knows what to do with.

"There is no magic formula for procedure. Tactics, tactics, and still more tactics are demanded. I stress records of things done, of the doing of them, of vocabularies strengthened, items or books read, ideas gathered; memorable movies, memorable radio programs.

"At all times the teacher should aim to create a desirable social atmosphere in his classroom. It is an intangible, of course, yet how very great the need for developing good attitudes toward social matters! Always, at all times, we are working for good will—not to be preached; most often to be achieved through implication."

d. (An experienced teacher of 4 English X states her method of meeting the need for varied activity during a class period). "Sustained concentration is lacking with the 'X' pupil—thus the changing of interests during the class hour is imperative. One of my characteristic periods could be analyzed as follows:

"FIVE MINUTES—Discussion and correction of one sentence extracted from a pupil's written work. Pupils interchange and correct. Routine prepared work on grammar, punctuation, and spelling.

"TWENTY MINUTES—The writing and correction of some simple original exercises is done. Daily practice in writing is advisable. The individual conference of pupil and teacher, even if it is brief, is valuable.

"FIFTEEN MINUTES—There is a class or a panel discussion of current topics, of the reading at present in hand, and there are reports and comment on the outside reading that has been done.

"FIVE MINUTES—If this amount of time is necessary for the giving of an assignment, it is taken from either the second or the third activity named above."

e. (Quoted from a teacher who was assigned his first "X" class six weeks before the time of this writing, October, 1936. Fourth year course).

"I have found no ground to dispute what has been said in our meetings about 'X' group people. However, I was not prepared for the free and easy manner with which a class of seniors came into my room on the first day of school. My first question was this: 'How many of you would take a high-school diploma to-day if it were offered you, no strings attached?' Almost every hand went up with enthusiasm, then as the implications sank in, began to go down. On the basis of that question we discussed for a day or two their personal problems of over-age, repeated failure, job-opportunities, and their point of view toward the present undertaking—that of getting an honest diploma which would mean to them certain knowledge gained, certain powers developed.

"The work of the class has since progressed on the assumptions agreed to—that school is expensive in time and money, that the student's job is to get what he pays for, that the teacher's function is to help him on his way. It is fairly well understood, too, that failure at this stage of the game would in all probability leave no space for alibis. All has not been sweetness and light, of course; old-fashioned pressures are constantly in use to get the young men and women to do as well as they know how.

"As far as curriculum is concerned we agreed, the class and I, to start with the most alive subject in sight—the election. The class fell rather evenly into Democratic and Republican; we elected a John Hamilton (colored) and a Jim Farley (Italian) and let them organize a series of rear-platform train speeches, following the candidates around the country. John and Jim did the introductions, and the party wheel-horses discussed the issues, with perhaps as much application of logic as is being currently used.

"Pressure is heavy to keep up-to-date. The class gets ten copies of News-Week every week, five of Scholastic, and one or two each of Harper's, the Atlantic Monthly (which does not fit in so well), The Reader's Digest, and the mechanics and science magazines every month. Newspapers are followed carefully, and every other day a volunteer gives a five-question quiz covering the events of the last forty-eight hours. News summaries, bulletins, and editorials keep the 'hand in' on the writing.

"True, one girl did write the other day that Al Smith was the running mate for Roosevelt and that the Townsend Plan was a scheme to save the poor working man, but in general everyone is doing some sensible reading, a little writing, and a great deal of talking.

"I do think that we teachers must take this last chance at these youngsters to make them a little less helpless in the contemporaneous scene. So far as our purpose is that, the course of study is being written for us by the publishing houses and the journalists, and therefore will never be finished in content, even though we make headway in our purposes.

"What we do in this course makes small difference so long as we arrive eventually at a greater degree of self-reliance in the management of the mother tongue."

f. (The teacher's reward for organizing and teaching low-ability groups, despite some of the unpleasant phases of the work, lies in the human profits, not the arithmetic ones. Often there is tremendous gain on the part of a child or of a class—gain of which no evidence gives warning. Case histories are rightly suspected as of greater sentimental value than of conclusive proof. However, the story (not written originally for publication) of the boy we can call Eliot is an example of that revival of the human spirit which makes eminently worth while any effort spent in its accomplishment. Eliot was the pupil of the teacher who is quoted in regard to remedial reading for the freshman year.)

"Eliot was the most illiterate white child I had met in Evanston Township High School. His written work bore mute evidence that he had never observed a printed page with interest. Capitals, periods, such little words as the, they, and, saw were missing, and the longer words frequently were so distorted as to have no resemblance to their proper form. Frequently Eliot made mistakes in grammar exercises because he didn't understand the printed directions. He was as impatient with printed explanations as I should be if they were printed in Chinese. 'Oh, I can't understand that!' was his frequent ill-tempered exclamation as he pushed aside his book in exasperation.

"But he did like the stories of wild life in Mills' book. Somehow he managed to create a picture from a sentence here and there. His pleasure in being able to recite drove him to persevere in the reading. Before the book was finished he had taken real pleasure in some of the stories. Then came library day. Eliot didn't want to take a book, but was persuaded to take Muir's Stickeen because it was so thin and because I assured him that the dog, Stickeen, was something like Mills' Scotch.

"When I reached my room the next morning, Eliot was waiting for me in the hall, his eyes as big as saucers. 'I finished my book,' he gasped. We hurried into the room where we could give vent to our excitement unheeded. 'I finished my book and it's 84 pages! At first I just thought I'd read about ten pages. You know you said to read for forty minutes. But I didn't stop. I read until ten o'clock. And I finished the story! That's the first book I ever read at home.'"

The future curriculum—The subject-matter, purposes, and materials of the first two years' work will not be greatly changed within the near future. Reading investigations must continue, and the collection of materials must be suited to the requirements of the slow reader and the poor writer. Improved techniques may be developed with which to train pupils to better reading and writing. The methods now in use are doing an acceptable job of getting pupils into the last two years' work with enough language skill to attempt a more definite growth program.

The position of the junior and senior "X" curricula is not so favorable. Dissatisfaction with the diluted college-preparatory resources has already been expressed, and the plan to continue the revision of these courses in terms of the new objectives is going forward. The materials listed previously for the third and fourth year work obviously do not make it possible to achieve satisfactorily the six objectives named earlier in the paper. Until the new work is more clearly conceived in its detail it is possible, by modification of the teaching approach, to use present resources for greater profit.

The success of each year's plans will rest largely with the reading and writing powers which have been nourished in the "X" courses of the freshman and sophomore years.

During the current year, that of 1936-1937, Evanston Township High School is conducting a two-credit, double-period combination course in which American history is approached not only through the usual historical sources, but also through the writing and the speeches of men of the era under consideration, or of current publications which apply to that era. The "classical" writers and their masterpieces are assumed to have not only intrinsic literary value, but also great significance as historical context. In fact, the latter value is considered paramount in the conduct of the course. No attempt is made to preserve the subject-matter of the regular Evanston third-year course. The essential purpose of the course may be stated perhaps naively this way: The facts of history have order and logic, they are too seldom brought to life; literature has vitality, color, and emotion; those things too often play their drama against a backdrop of vacuity. The combination course is one step towards a proportioned understanding.

For the reasons given above for the present experimental fusion course, and because there is a belief that specifically planned integration is probably more important for pupils of low-ability than for any other group, as they are less likely to acquire it by self-directed efforts, the juniors of the non-academic group will, in the fall of 1937, be assigned to such unions of subject-matter. The administration of the class will be influenced by the experience gained in the present set-up. Readings, both general and intensive, will be modified as experience with low-ability pupils dictates.

The general approach will be from contemporary problems and interests, following causal sequences back from those questions. No approach can be applied with rigid logicity, for human interests and the books found suitable to feed them, are attracted more by heat than by light. If an abundance of readings cannot be found suited to the ability of junior "X" pupils, then a cyclical arrangement of broad topics will be tried dealing with such aspects of national development as the early colonies, the Mississippi River (with Mark Twain assisting), the fur trade, the voyageurs, the gold rushes, homesteading on the plains, the Civil War, railroads, lumber, steel. These and many other phases of the national life are surrounded with a popular literature. These things, and not the political froth which they whip up, might be thought of as the America that the child of limited intelligence can comprehend.

The final year of English X is to be organized around the interests of the pupil as a person who is trying to adjust himself to a most pressing environment, and whose need for success in that adjustment is going to be greatest in a matter of months. Social and economic adaptation is an acute problem for every citizen; infinitely more so for the one whose intellectual potentialities and cultural background limit his power to meet the world on equal terms with his generation.

• Present courses in law and business organization, in problems of democracy, in home economics merely etch more sharply the need of the child to understand something of the myriad decisions he will have to make at his own risk. Such courses prepare him only in part to use his time and his money wisely; working in conjunction with an English course they might avoid duplication of effort and achieve a greater harmony of result.

Two main purposes will dominate the work of the fourth year. One will be the solution of many of the practical problems of the citizen as a consumer, a handler of money, a bank depositor, insurance buyer, lease signer, used-car prospect.

The fourth year course will expand, in an area of more difficult items, the list of how-to-do's of the second year.*

Conjointly the 4 English X course will organize a persistent attempt to make the pupil a reader of contemporary print, an attempt whose objective is the creation of reading habits. Daily papers, weekly summaries, Collier's and The Saturday Evening Post, fiction and science magazines, and a background of solid monthly publications will constitute the texts for that function of the course. Steady attention to the daily and weekly events of the world should broaden horizons: the young men and women near to voting age may learn what a diverse large world they live in, and in so doing may slough off certain dangerous spots of ignorance, provincialism, and bigotry.

Results of the "X" program—Every boy or girl who has been graduated from the Evanston Township High School since and including 1932 with his fourth year of required English credit from the "X" course would, without that or some similar opportunity, have failed of graduation.† That statement holds without significant numerical exception. Other educational gains were made in the case of pupils who were so strengthened by the remedial work of the first two years that they were able later to handle the regular courses in English. Other pupils undoubtedly have been induced to stay in school a longer time because of the special courses open to them.

On the comparatively valid assumption that most of the pupils (292 in the fall of 1936) enrolled in English low-ability classes would be denied their English credits were such courses not offered, a high degree of salvage can be claimed throughout the four years of English training prior to graduation. Of the 292 children now enrolled there must be considered those who are not able to meet the requirements of the special curriculum. It may be fairly stated that the failures in the "X" courses are largely those cases of complete and persistent indifference or lack of effort. These are, in most instances, the pupils of lowest mental ability. Despite skill in method, adaptation in content, and individualized motivation, there is apparently an irreducible minimum of failures when "all the children of all the people" attempt secondary-school courses, and when there is to be any measure in terms of educational progress. It appears from the work attempted in this school that there remains, after reasonable attempts at adaptation, a group of pupils whose needs cannot be adequately met by the normal school agency. This result would seem to give evidence to the conclusion of the National Committee on the Orientation of Secondary Education as presented in "Issue Two" of their report, which recommends a supplementary custodial agency for such pupils.

*See Appendix B.

†111 credits in 4 English X have been awarded. Of that number of candidates for graduation, some may not have received their diplomas for other reasons.

There is reason to believe, however, that continued attempts to improve both material and methods will further reduce the number of failures even when measured in terms of some kind of intellectual activity. Beyond this springs the hope that for the "X" group, if not for others, a judgment predicated upon a credit or unit basis will disappear. Failure there may be in part and personal achievement in part, but the judgment, when it must be made, will rest primarily upon social adjustment in key with individual capacity.

Two things have obviously been achieved by the organization of "X" English: educational opportunity has been made more democratic, to the immediate personal advantage of hundreds of children; on the other hand teacher morale and normal educational standards have been maintained. The first result is by far the more important one; the values of the second may be assumed within the scope of this paper. Segregation by ability has given the handicapped child the kind of program he needs. It has, at the same time, released teacher energies to the improvement of the educational opportunities offered the middle and high groups. Teachers no longer have to attempt the impossible. Certain it is that the maintenance of standards is partly a matter of selective organization. The extension of high-school services to special groups above or below the norm presents such groups with materials and activities appealing to their particular interests and abilities. The result may well be a higher relative standard of personal achievement within those groups. There seems reason to believe this has happened. Certain it is that greater happiness and a constructive sense of personal worth and accomplishment have come to a considerable number of pupils who otherwise would have dropped from the school to carry, probably, some degree of bitterness and disillusionment for the remainder of their lives.

2 English X Activities

The following activities have been tried out in class:

SPEAKING EXPERIENCES—1. To telephone a railroad or bus office about schedules, to telephone grocery orders, to call a taxi, a doctor, etc.; 2. To talk informally about a movie or radio program; 3. To talk informally about books or magazines; 4. To tell about motor or other trips; 5. To persuade a friend to join on some outing; 6. To persuade father or mother to consent to some privilege; 7. To engage in a serious conversation; 8. To preside at a class or club meeting; 9. To take part in a class presentation of a play; 10. To discuss a story common to all; 11. To apologize for an accident or misdeed; 12. To congratulate a friend upon an achievement; 13. To make constructive class criticism; 14. To apply for a job at a grocery store, agency, etc.; 15. To act as teacher's assistant; and 16. To give simple directions.

WRITING EXPERIENCES—1. To write tardy slips at school; 2. To write an excuse for absence from school or work; 3. To write Change-of-Address cards at Post Office; 4. To fill Money Order applications at Post Office; 5. To write letters to change an address, make complaint, ask a favor, apologize, correct an error, etc.; 6. To write general business letters; 7. To order merchandise from a newspaper advertisement or from a catalogue; 8. To write friendly letters and notes; 9. To write informal notes to leave on a teacher's or parent's desk to explain some change of plans; 10. To write an informal invitation or a reply to one; 11. To write "thank-you" and "bread-and-butter" notes; 12. To write brief impressions of a talk, play, movie, radio program; 13. To write the minutes of a meeting; 14. To write the report of a committee; 15. To relay by letter some business from one person to another; 16. To write letters of application for various tasks; and 17. To take notes from lectures or talks.

READING EXPERIENCES—1. To read various parts of newspapers; 2. To read the school paper; 3. To read advertisements; 4. To read the telephone directory; 5. To read the dictionary; 6. To read a catalogue to order goods; 7. To read railroad time tables, travel guides, etc.; 8. To read indexes, prefaces, marginal notes of books; 9. To read an encyclopedia for definite information; 10. To read school, city, or general notices; 11. To read the "want-ad" section of papers; 12. To read adventure, mystery, animal, air, sea stories for pure enjoyment; 13. To skim a less important type of writing; 14. To read for a definite purpose, as for information on a hobby; 15. To read the Reader's Guide; and 16. To read personal and business letters intelligently.

LISTENING EXPERIENCES—1. To listen to oral reading, class speeches, reports; 2. To listen to brief teacher talks; 3. To listen to homeroom announcements; 4. To listen to general assembly speeches and talks; 5. To listen to radio talks; 6. To listen to class criticism and suggestions; and 7. To listen to movie news reels.

The following experiences are suggestions and will be tried out:

SPEAKING EXPERIENCES—1. To telephone friends about informal parties or plans; 2. To telephone invitations, congratulations, etc.; 3. To make a long-distance call; 4. To greet a friend or stranger at the door; 5. To purchase goods at a store; 6. To visit with friends about people, places, etc.; 7. To talk about one's new car, bicycle, home, etc.; 8. To direct a workman or janitor; 9. To explain to a doctor or nurse one's troubles; 10. To carry on brief talk on street or corridor; 11. To introduce strangers to each other; 12. To excuse one's self from a group; 13. To express sorrow at a friend's bereavement; 14. To talk around the school lunch table; 15. To converse with the family at the dinner table; 16. To order a meal at a restaurant; 17. To ask a small favor of a friend, schoolmate, teacher; 18. To ask to borrow a book for school use; 19. To express one's opinion on a matter of conduct or dress; 20. To interview a teacher, shopkeeper, professional man, etc.; 21. To accept a class, club election to office; 22. To apply for student aid; and 23. To carry a verbal message from one teacher to another.

WRITING EXPERIENCES—1. To fill out bank applications to start a checking or savings account; 2. To fill Stop Payment and Change of Address bank cards; 3. To write deposit slips for checking or savings account; 4. To write bank checks or savings withdrawals slips; 5. To write receipts, personal or for bank vouchers; 6. To fill in Ownership Certificate for bonds; 7. To fill blank of application for house or apartment lease; 8. To fill blank of application for charge account at store; 9. To fill state application blank for motorcycle, automobile, for transfer of title, for correction of title, or for title only; 10. To write a diary; 11. To fill in Y. M. C. A. membership application; 12. To write a telegram or night letter; 13. To write a laboratory experiment; 14. To write brief announcements for room, club, paper; 15. To fill application blanks for work at stores or agencies; 16. To fill state application for chauffeur's license; and 17. To write advice to younger members of family.

READING EXPERIENCES—1. To read stories in cheap magazines as a basis of comparison for others; 2. To read road or street signs; 3. To read the creative work of other pupils; 4. To read price lists and make comparisons; 5. To read specific directions and long notices; 6. To read market quotations; 7. To read local newspaper editorials; 8. To read the lease for a house or apartment; and 9. To read simple parts of an insurance policy.

LISTENING EXPERIENCES—1. To listen to radio programs to make comparisons; 2. To listen to sermons or lectures; 3. To listen to school chorus or orchestra; 4. To listen to directions or announcements; 5. To listen to a doctor's or nurse's prescription; 6. To listen to a reprimand from elders; 7. To listen as a participant in conversations with friends or older people or the prattle of younger children; 8. To listen to an argument or debate as judge; 9. To listen to visiting pupils give a program in class; 10. To take oral assignments or directions; and 11. To listen to talks on hobbies or special interests.

APPENDIX C.

(The training in writing given to low-ability pupils beginning high school English. The technique is the teacher's own, not necessarily that used by all teachers of "X" English.)

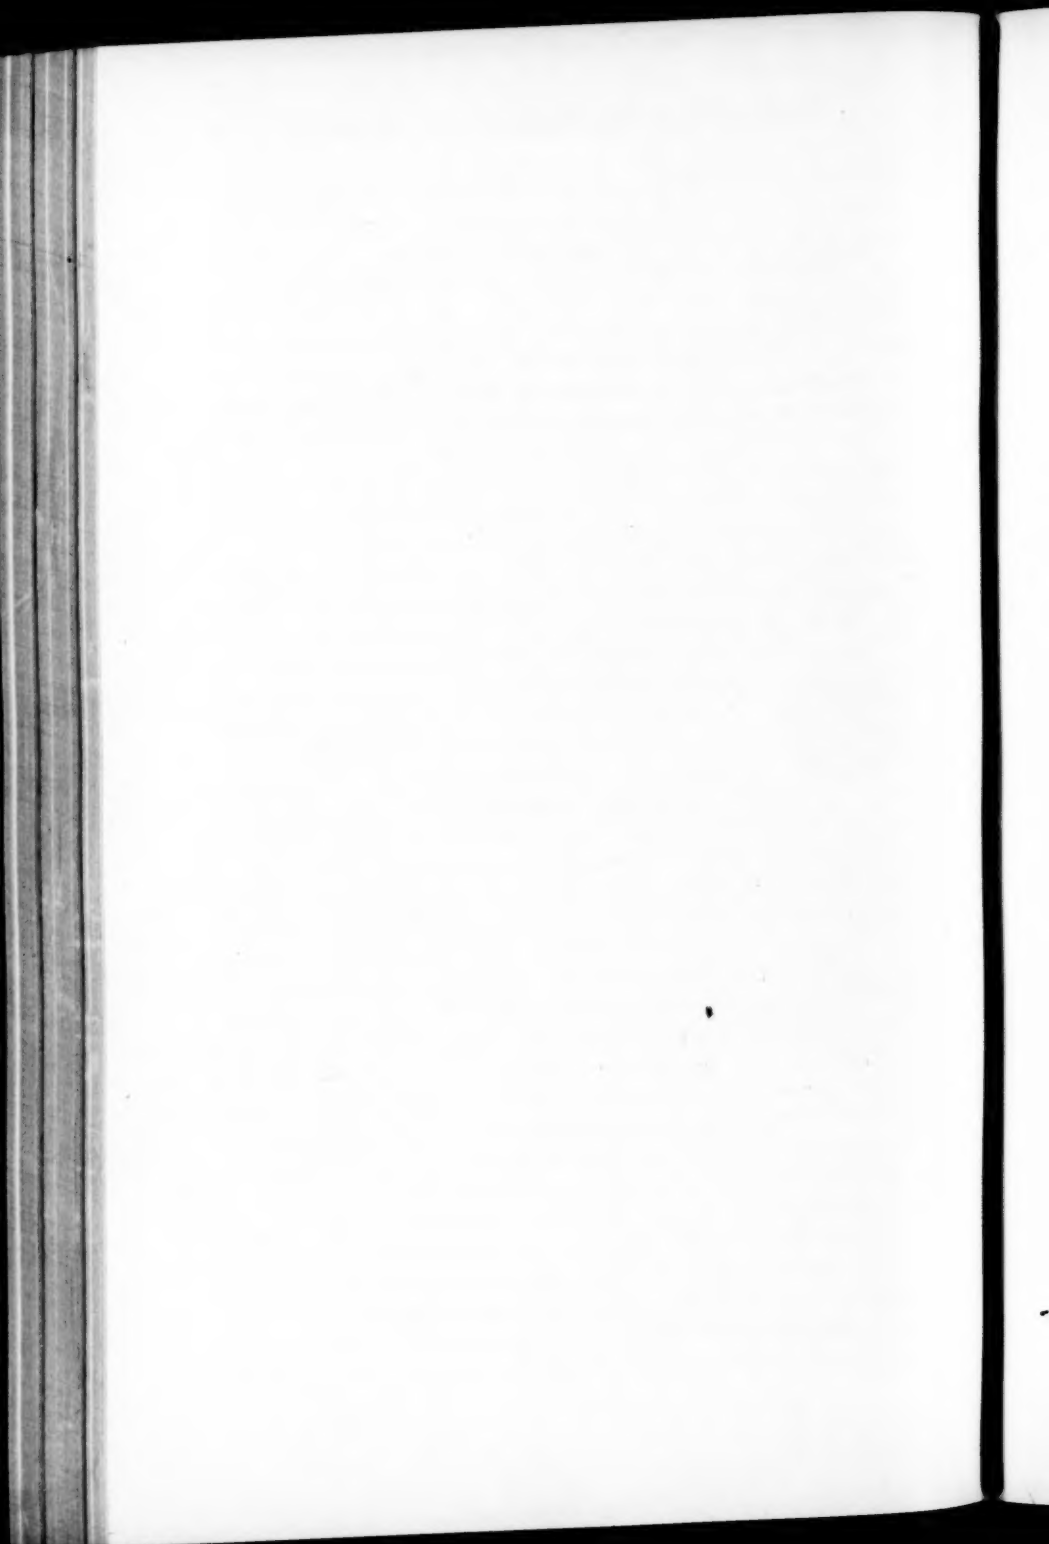

"Although my primary concern in 1 English X is to improve my pupils' reading ability, I spend almost as much time on composition activities as on reading. To rid their speech of its most flagrant errors, to make it clear, to enable them to write understandable, accurate English are my aims. Because I believe that these pupils, soon to end their formal schooling, need tools on which they can rely in future efforts to use correct English and because they have the adolescent's typical desire to understand what he is learning and why it is being taught, I do not rely upon parrot-like repetition for the formation of habits of correct expression. Instead I teach some technical grammar. I also teach rules for spelling and for punctuation. The grammar is extremely simplified and is taught for utilitarian reasons only. 'A verb is a word that can change its time.' 'A preposition doesn't make sense by itself.' The pupils are taught of verbs only enough to enable them to correct their own faulty use, of prepositional phrases enough to clarify the agreement of verb with simple subject that they may avoid 'Some pieces of cake was left.' They memorize a list of common linking verbs in order that they may know whether to use adjective or adverb after a verb, nominative pronoun or objective. Fundamental concepts, like the difference between singular and plural, we take ample time to understand thoroughly. 'All the pupils have their notebooks' is changed to 'Every pupil has his notebook,' and vice versa. 'Our Living Language and How to Teach It,' by Driggs, has been my most helpful guide in determining what aspects of grammar have the greatest functional value.

"For the recognition of incomplete and run-on sentences the pupils are trained to rely on the sound of their own voices, to listen for the falling inflection. Realizing at last that their persistent use of run-on sentences results from sixteen-year-olds' scorn for the short 'primer' sentence, which is all they really know how to write, I have felt obliged to give them considerable practice in making complex sentences. Here I do my best to avoid technical terminology. The circumlocutions with which I make my explanations are clumsy but preferable, I believe, to antecedent, relative, adjective clause, adverbial clause, restrictive, non-restrictive, which to "X" pupils would be meaningless jargon.

"In attempting to teach slow-learners I rely on two basic principles: I analyze my own mental processes and then present them to the class one step at a time; if I must use an unfamiliar vocabulary, I thoroughly establish the meaning of each word in the children's minds first. An example may be helpful. Because of the frequent appearance of geting, hiding, and swimming on the pupils' papers I decide I must teach the rule for doubling a consonant before a suffix. First we learn what a syllable is. With my hand held so that the four fingers can represent my upper jaw and my thumb the lower jaw I open and close my hand as I would open and close my mouth in the pronunciation of syllables. The class practices with me. At last all understand that a syllable is pronounced with one opening and closing of the mouth. We count the number of syllables of words of various lengths. A short paragraph in the textbook is selected. For homework the pupils are to list all the words of one syllable which it contains. The next day we check their finding. Then we review the list of vowels which all memorized in grammar school. It is written on the board where we can easily refer to it. We recall that all other letters are consonants. Perhaps we list the consonants on the board. Then we mark with a v for vowel and a c for consonant the last three letters of every monosyllable on our homework list. We notice that some words end in vowels, some in two consonants. We put a circle around any that happens to end in a consonant preceded by one vowel. Of course we have stopped to learn what preceded means. For homework that night every pupil is asked to prepare a list of ten words of one syllable ending in one consonant preceded by one vowel. The next day all the lists are copied on the board. Some words don't meet the required specifications. The pupils point them out. Then we list the common suffixes, er, ed, ing without calling them suffixes. The rule is informally stated and the teacher goes about the room adding suffixes to all those words on the board which can take them, the class reminding her when to double the consonant. For several days practice continues, with monosyllables that end in a consonant preceded by one vowel and with monosyllables that don't, with suffixes that begin with vowels and with suffixes that don't, with a teacher-selected list of polysyllables which mustn't double their final consonants. Then the rule is formally stated, copied in notebooks, and memorized. For more than a month we refer to it often. Eventually we expand it to include polysyllables accented on the last syllable, involving ourselves in a careful preliminary practice in accents."

TECHNOLOGY AND CULTURE

By DAVID CUSHMAN COYLE

Condensed from the Bulletin of the American Library Association, October, 1936, pp. 919-922.

Published by the American Library Association
520 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Technology has released millions of workers. They cannot be used unless they are used in the cultural services that are, in fact, the substance of civilized life. The function of technical progress is to make cultural services possible. The only possible answer to the riddle of technological unemployment is cultural advance.

In a small society, such as the Athens of Pericles, all this laborious intellectual struggle with economic concepts was unnecessary. Everyone knew that surplus productive power went into art and recreation as a matter of course. We are confused only because of the misunderstanding fostered by our financial leaders. The answer, however, is the same for us that it was when Pericles built the Parthenon as a public works project, and subsidized the theater out of the national treasury. The lasting contributions of Athens to humanity were mainly the product of what any wealthy taxpayer would have called "boondoggling" if the Greek tongue had admitted such a word.

Since America is large and complicated we have to readjust our laws and customs by careful thought instead of by natural instinct. Those whose primary concern is with culture will also have to devote care and attention to their own orientation to new social forces, new trends, and a new direction of historic progress.

In all but the most conservative circles, the need for wide and uncensored discussion is freely admitted. Books are more nearly free than newspapers, the radio, or the newsreels, or even than most of the magazines. Periods of vast social change are marked by the important role of pamphlets and books, especially books of moderate price. The value of the library is therefore enhanced in times like the present. Intelligent public officials can be made to see the unusual importance of books in this period of change.

Such are the arguments in favor of enlarged library service in a time when public services are being pressed to reduce their budgets. But political argument is one thing; fundamental understanding of historic trends is something else. Underneath all the problems and difficulties of the moment we should be conscious of the great tide in the affairs of men that is carrying us forward. Back of economic maladjustment and political confusion is the push of an irresistible force—the massive progress of technology. Men and women are being liberated—not from the need of working for a living but from the need of working on material things. A spectacular advance in every field of culture is required by economic necessity. The stage is set for the dawn of a great age of enlightenment. It is a time for courage, endurance, and vision; for if now we can show the quality of a great race, we have our opportunity to make the beginning of a great civilization.

WATCH TEACHERS GROW

By GEORGE C. KYTE

Professor of Education, University of California

Condensed from The Nation's Schools, October, 1936, pp. 22-24.

Published by The Nation's Schools Company, Inc.,
919 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago.

In order to understand how curriculum revision can contribute to teachers' growth, we must first determine the nature of a good course of study. The well-organized manual of instruction contains certain parts that are essential to the user, if he is to obtain from it the professional guidance desired. The divisions include: (1) Educational objectives; (2) Specific aims; (3) Teaching procedures; and (4) Detailed guidance.

The outcomes consist of the standards of achievement and other educationally sound attainments in keeping with the general educational aims and the specific objectives. Since the outcomes are products of learning experiences, they include: (a) Essential knowledge; (b) Fundamental habits and skills; and (c) Right attitudes.

All members of the teaching staff must be aroused to the point of understanding the limitations of the course of study in use, of feeling concerned about its shortcomings and of desiring to improve it. Examples of the ways that the professional staff have been made deeply conscious of their needs and earnestly desirous of meeting them appear in the published accounts of curriculum revision.

No matter what procedure is followed—the instructional survey, the informative and inspirational lecture, the discussion involving staff participation—if the outside curriculum expert is employed in this step, or any step, for that matter, his role must be that of an adviser only. If curriculum revision is to be a growth producing in-service training program, the learners must be the doers.

Four large phases must be carried on by them intensively and thoroughly: (1) The coöperative development of sound educational philosophy; (2) The development of specific objectives; (3) The determination of effective teaching procedures; and (4) The formulation of specific guidance needed by each teacher. Although the four phases generally occur in that order, any resulting tentative draft will undergo changes as the teaching staff grows through study, experimentation, work, discussion, and similar activities involved in curriculum revision.

MAKE CHILDREN WANT TO LEARN

By IRL H. DULEBOHN

Condensed from The Journal of Education, October 5, 1936, pp. 421-22.
Published by the New England Publishing Company,
6 Park Street, Boston, Massachusetts.

Some one has said that knowledge begins in wonder. Set a child to wondering and you have put him on the road to understanding. If this be true, and I believe it is, then let us seek out the things that set our pupils wondering. Let us find striking statements, unusual circumstances, extraordinary phases of every lesson, and use them as an introduction. Perhaps our pupils then will seek other marvels for themselves. There is precedent for such procedure. Public speakers use the startling statement to capture the interest of their audience. Here is one well-tried tool. Let us learn to use it well. Let us try to set our pupils wondering.

Teachers, like investments, should draw interest. The more interest they draw the better investments, the better teachers, they are. And teachers attract the interest of their pupils by being interested themselves.

And, speaking of interest, let us study the interests of our pupils. If we wish to interest children in our subject let us not be above interesting ourselves in theirs. A few early hours spent in discovering and cultivating the interests of our pupils will help amazingly to interest them in us, and ours.

For all children have their interests. Every child, be he bright or dull, is interested in something. If we are too stupid to discover these interests, so much the worse for us, for the interests are there. Some are laudable and may be encouraged; others are unworthy and must be replaced by more worthy interests; all, however, will serve as leading lines to draw our pupils to us. It is our task to discover and use them if we would make children want to learn.

And let us be practical. Their name is legion, those who lose interest in school because they found no practical application in their studies, and who later, by their inherent genius, became leaders of men.

We buy no food to be eaten, no clothing to be worn ten years hence. The teachers I like to observe find some way of tying their subjects to the present, everyday interests of their pupils, and it is surprising what the exercise of a little ingenuity will accomplish in this direction. They are the teachers whose children want to learn.

"Don't teach subjects, teach children," the sages. Don't teach children, inspire them, I advise. Use their interests to draw them close to you. Be practical. Set them wondering, for knowledge begins in wonder. Last of all be interested and interesting.

LABOR LOOKS AT EDUCATION

By JOHN L. LEWIS, President
United Mine Workers of America

From The School Executive, October, 1936, pp. 45-46.
Published by The School Executive Magazine Company, Lincoln, Nebraska.

It is to me one of the most sadly ironic aspects of modern industrial life that those who build beautiful houses, make beautiful furniture, weave beautiful fabrics, fashion beautiful jewelry, construct beautiful ships, rarely if ever, can even hope to enjoy the things created by their own labor. This thought always come to me when I see the magnificent structures which house our great educational institutions, into the building of which has gone the toil of an army of men, as well as the craftsmanship of master artisans in stone, in brick, in iron, and in wood. Yet, I know that not one in a thousand of the children of these workers have ever entered these temples of learning which their fathers helped to build.

I am aware, of course, that some of our higher schools and colleges make provision for students to work their way through. Also, under relief activities of the Federal Government during the present depression, such as the Youth Administration, assistance has been given to needy students. But such provisions as these can take care of a small fraction only of those in need of similar help. Labor, of course, resents that this should be so. It does not attach an exaggerated importance to the economic value of an education. It knows that a college degree is not a guarantee of success in business life.

But it also knows that, other things being equal, the well-educated youth has a one hundred to one better chance of success than the little educated. But even more than this, the average worker realizes, in some cases dimly perhaps and inarticulately, that education has certain cultural values not measurable in money. He is conscious of his own limitations in this respect and wishes his children to be free of such limitations.

The most depressing fact in the lives of so many workers is that they must live not only economically but cheaply in the worst sense of the word. They must put up with cheap and ugly things, jerry-built houses, drab neighborhoods, poorly made clothing, shoddy furniture. And they are quite conscious of this fact.

The best and simplest way to solve this problem would be, of course, to raise the earnings of the workers to a point where they could themselves meet the expenses incident to giving their children an adequate education. I know that this is quite possible. The actual and potential wealth and wealth-producing resources of this country are amply sufficient to assure every family a comfortable and happy living, including liberal provision for educational purposes. Moreover, we have the necessary technical knowledge and craft skill to exploit these resources to their fullest extent. All we need is the desire and the will. This desire and this will, as well as the initiative toward a better industrial order, must come. It appears, from the workers, including in this term those who labor by brain as well as by hand. For this reason, the labor movement has a far larger significance than is often attributed to it.

I have complete confidence in the ultimate success of this movement. But I do not minimize at all the severity of the struggle, or the possibility that it may be a long continued one. In the meantime, the problem of universalizing our educational opportunities can only be met by making education really free. This means some form of public assistance. Every child, rich or poor, who demonstrates, by appropriate tests, the possession of the requisite mental and moral qualifications should be given the necessary help to put him through high school at least, and again under appropriate tests for suitability, through college.

Political democracy is a splendid thing. If it could be united with a real economic democracy, the results would be still more splendid. One of the first fruits of the new unionism should be democracy of education.

SALVAGING OUR GIFTED CHILDREN

By HARVEY W. ZORBACH and RHEA K. BOARDMAN
Clinic for the Social Adjustment of the Gifted School of Education, New York University

Condensed from The Journal of Educational Sociology, October, 1936, pp. 100-108.

Editorial offices: Room 42, Press Building,
New York University, New York City.

We, as a nation, are scandalously dissipating and wasting the resource represented by our gifted children. We spend annually millions on the feeble-minded, with no hope of return. Yet we are willing to invest little if anything in our gifted children, despite the fact that we might certainly expect an immeasurably rich return from such an investment.

In a skyscraper building on Washington Square, in New York is one of the most interesting institutions in the world, New York University's Clinic for the Social Adjustment of the Gifted. Through this Clinic, conducted by the School of Education of New York University, day in and day out pass a stream of gifted and talented children—young writers, young painters, young musicians, young scientists, and others who are destined to be leaders in business, industry, politics, and other fields of human endeavor. Their parents have come to the Clinic for advice on various problems concerning them—their education, opportunities for development of special talents, problems of family relationships and behaviors. Here, overlooking the roofs of Greenwich Village where for years genius has run riot, science is trying to learn more about the nature of the gifted, their development, and their problems of adjustment.

The majority of these children were referred by their parents. The fact that so few children, relatively, are referred by schools, reflects the lack of concern of our public schools with the behavior and adjustment of children. It may further reflect the fact that few children in the New York schools are given intelligence tests, and that teachers tend to look upon children who are not adjusting to the school situation, and consequently not learning, as dull.

The Clinic defines a gifted child as one whose intelligence quotient is 130 or above, the highest one per cent of the child population in intelligence. It is interested in children talented in art, music, and the like only if they are of high intelligence as well. The gifted children observed by the Clinic seem to be not only of superior mentality but of super physical development and vitality and to come from family stocks likewise superior in these respects.

The Clinic accepts children for two types of service: "advisory" and "treatment". Advisory service is given at the request of parent, school, or social agency, usually concerning problems of placement—finding suitable schools, recreational outlets, clinical or other agency services, or institutions.

The variety of specific problems in which these children's difficulties expressed themselves ran the entire gamut of maladjustment—enuresis, masturbation, stuttering, hysteria, compulsions, mild obsessions, seclusiveness, excessive day-dreaming and phantasy, temper tantrums, quarreling, fighting, defiance, running away from home, truancy, lying, stealing, obscene talk and writing obscene notes, sex delinquency, and the like. In all of these children, however, the behavior which led to the child's referral was clearly symptomatic of an underlying emotional disturbance.

The Clinic feels no need of arguing the significance of its work. Gifted children are the nations most precious resource. The conservation and utilization of these children will prove of far more importance, when our national history is written, than the conservation of forests, coal, fisheries, or oil. These children have an enormous contribution to make—in intellectual achievement and leadership—if they can realize their possibilities.

Yet along the way to maturity many of them pass into adult life with handicaps which prevent their making anything like their possible contribution to our national life. There is no space here to discuss the difficulties of adjustment and self-realization faced by gifted children. Any one who doubts the reality of these difficulties will do well to read Terman's three volumes, Genetic Studies of Genius; Lita Hollingsworth's Gifted Children, Their Nature and Nurture; and Paynter and Blanchard, The Educational Achievement of Problem Children.

THE GIFTED CHILD AND HIS EDUCATION

By HOWARD TAYLOR

Dean of the Oklahoma College for Women
Director of the Oklahoma Institute of Family Relations and Child Welfare

Condensed from The Journal of Exceptional Children, October, 1936,
pp. 10-14.

Editorial Offices: 37 Capital Avenue, N. E., Battle Creek, Michigan.

There are some fairly well-defined principles to guide us in the task of formulating an educational program for gifted children. Six things, at least, must be accomplished in the lives of these children, and while the following principles are also valid in the education of normal children, it is especially important that they be not neglected in the education of the gifted: (1) Education should help the gifted child to adapt himself to his social environment; (2) Education should fully challenge the learning ability of the gifted child; (3) Education should take place within the limits of the physical and mental ability of the learner; (4) Education should have breadth and depth through enrichment rather than height through acceleration; (5) Education should take into account maturation as well as learning ability; and (6) Education should provide adequately for a wide range and variety in individual differences.

Gifted children should be grouped together, if the school is large enough to justify it. Where such grouping is not feasible, the gifted should have individual assignments to supplement the regular work of the school, and there should be group assignments. The project method and other forms of socialized learning have been used most effectively in this connection. A well-planned project may include not only the gifted, but also children of average and low ability. Exceptional opportunities are thus afforded the gifted child for leadership, coöperation, and helpfulness.

The gifted child must be given freedom to launch out on his own initiative and do creative thinking and learning. There is a constant danger that the gifted child will be thwarted and held in restraint when he is eager to go on. Therefore the gifted child ought to move on in creative work without the curb of deadening drill and routine tasks that are not so much meaningless to him as they are dull and futile. For example, a work-book can be so misused as to bore the gifted child into indifference and neglect. At the same time this work-book may be a life-saver to the dull and a helpful crutch to the normal.

While opportunity is being given the gifted child to follow his own interests and broaden his horizon, care should be taken that the social environment is adapted to his biological age.

Another factor which should be a part of the education of the gifted child is stimulation through frequent and intimate contact with other gifted children and by the companionship of gifted teachers. The inspiration which comes through association with those who are achieving is one of the best incentives to growth and earnest effort. Through such contacts the miracle of suggestion will kindle fires of genius which otherwise would be forever unlighted.

Regardless of the other activities in which a gifted child may participate, he should, without exception, engage in some form of recreation and also develop an interest and some skill in fine art. Recreational and aesthetic interests should be so developed that they have a permanent value which will carry on into adult life.

One other thing is vital in the proper education of the gifted child. He must grow in social responsibility. This leads on into the most difficult, but by no means the least important, phase of the education of the gifted. This is the education of the spirit. It is possible through wrong education to turn a gifted child into an intellectual monstrosity. The affective and volitional processes are of immeasurable importance in the life of every child. To fail at this point would be a pathetic and tragic blunder. There is still a place in life for a patriotism that is more intelligent and humane than a linguistic nationalism. There is yet need for an understanding and appreciation of the abiding values which are the substance of religion. The gifted child needs to possess a loyalty to the home as the social institution to which has been committed the most sacred of human relationships.

All of these things should be a part of the education of our gifted children. To have an education is their right; to give it to them is our duty and privilege.

SOME CURRENT ISSUES IN TEACHER EDUCATION

By PAYSON SMITH

Condensed from The Educational Record, July, 1936, pp. 428-440.

Published by The American Council on Education,
Washington, D. C.

Our present programs of teacher education seem to ignore too much the necessity of breaking down the walls that isolate the schools from other forces that are constantly modifying the purposes of education as a whole. For example, those who are conversant with the matter point to the importance of having a more widespread understanding of conditions affecting mental health. It is being accepted quite generally that work in this field must be done in youth. Not only are there known to be distressing results occurring in childhood, but much unhappiness and sickness that develop in later years might be avoided or mitigated if the problem could be earlier faced. In spite of the exigency in this matter that is now recognized, and in spite of the known means for dealing with it, a great majority of our teachers go into classrooms with little or no understanding either of the basic elements of the problem or of the availability of the means of coping with it. A consideration of a matter of this kind should not be regarded as an intrusion into the curriculum of an institution training teachers; it should be recognized as an imperative obligation.

Or, again, there is no need to do more than to refer to certain phases of the so-called crime situation in our American civilization. No one can now be ignorant of this matter in relation to juvenile delinquency. We know that, this very day, teachers are looking into the faces of hundreds of boys and girls who appear to be doomed to acquire within the next few years court records and commitment to so-called reform or even penal institutions. So it would appear that teachers in the course of their preparation should have their minds opened and their sympathies awakened in order that constructive assistance be given to other agencies that are trying to grapple with a matter of so great general concern. Of course the ultimate implications of studies in this field are of infinite importance in dealing with normal as well as with abnormal behavior situations.

Most teachers learn only incidentally, or through some specially aroused interest, of such significant activities as Scouting, the 4-H Clubs, the general recreational service offered in the community, the privileges offered by health and guidance centers, and by libraries and museums. Knowledge of all these and of others should be sufficiently acquired in the period of teacher education to provide a base for the more extensive interest and understanding that would follow with experience in teaching. The tendency of the schools to become isolated not only deprives them of the opportunity to be more serviceable to other agencies, it also narrows their own objectives, and decreases their effectiveness even within their own fields. As a result, the schools fall far short of their possibilities as socially constructive forces.

The professional training of secondary-school teachers is now only at its beginning. While we may not disregard, nor fail to give credit for the considerable progress of the past two decades, particularly as regards in-service training, yet it is true that the great majority of teachers now in our secondary schools have as their background the general courses of liberal arts colleges. These teachers have been chosen on the basis of their knowledge of the subjects they were to be required to teach. They have been and are expected to transfer to pupils on the secondary level as much of the scholarship they have attained on the collegiate level as can appropriately be required of high-school students.

One of the needs of education is to find the way in which knowledge held by the experts can be transferred to safe and efficient application by the laity. Only the other day a physician was quoted as saying if the knowledge now revealed through research in medicine could be intelligently applied among the people that certain ailments now taking heavy toll would almost at once be very greatly reduced in their destructive results. Granting something to the obstinancy of humans to follow the better way when they clearly see it, yet it is clear that there is often conspicuous failure to interpret for common use certain proven and known facts.

Secondary education is to-day calling for some college Guyot, James, or Agassiz, who will bring down and interpret on the high-school level the fundamental principles at least of the social sciences. The same holds true of the entire secondary curriculum. What I am trying to say is that you who are anxious to have the liberal arts colleges continue to serve as centers of training for secondary-school teachers must not expect to hold your ground if you send out persons with diplomas of scholarship achievement alone. There must go with those diplomas abilities to meet high-school students on the level of their needs and understanding.

The paramount interest in the entire situation is that of the public having good schools.

Every other measure of the work of a school system, or all others taken together, are subordinate to this one, namely, the quality of the teaching force. Continued increase of efficiency of teaching is the best and probably the only guarantee of continued progress in American education. Neither institutional existence nor institutional aggrandizement has any important place in the picture. If the desired result of better teaching can be had only in normal schools and teachers colleges, then to such schools should the task be assigned. If the liberal arts colleges can produce for our schools, even the elementary schools, better teachers than we can otherwise get, then the public interest would be served by transferring to such colleges the entire function. If broader basic education is needed with professional training at the end, then that is the direction in which we must move. To such questions no one can make answer now, nor perhaps can answer be given for a long time. It is not too early, however, at least to raise these questions which are so thoroughly significant to the continued progress of our American schools.

The points that I have tried to make are these: The education of teachers on all levels must pay greater heed to the numerous factors and agencies that have mutual responsibilities; and second, that there is a clear challenge to all institutions that are interested in the education of secondary teachers to grapple with a problem that may well prove to be the most interesting one of the next few decades, namely, a more effective service for that vast and, in some of its parts, new field of post-elementary education.

A YOUTH CORPORATION

By HOWARD VINCENT O'BRIEN

Condensed from The Chicago Daily News, October 23, 1936.
Chicago, Illinois.

Jacob Kindleberger, a manufacturer of Kalamazoo, Michigan, offers a plan whereby boys and girls are given useful and profitable part time work.

A club, an individual, a business house, or a group of parents acts as sponsor. It is not a money-making scheme for the sponsors; it may even cost them a little money.

Quoting Mr. Kindleberger: "Boys are organized as a corporation with the usual officers. They solicit and do odd jobs in the community. The smaller boys make and sell such things as birdhouses, lawn furniture, and other simple articles. The girls bake cookies, do simple sewing, care for children, serve lunches, and so on.

"The 'company' is paid—not the boys and girls. They are paid from the company treasury on the basis of work performed. Thus they get training in sales, accounting, collections, and the usual practices of business. It will be found that wage scales whereby they can earn about twenty cents an hour will be about right.

"Theory does not figure in the plan. It has been tried and proved. It was originally begun in a small community near Kalamazoo. The principal of the high school took the older boys, the school manual-training teacher took the younger ones, and the president of the Ladies' Aid of the community church took the girls."

The merit of plans such as this one is that they tend to develop a harmonious unity in the young mind. The child learns the theory and practice of trade without realizing that he is being educated. Best of all, he learns to accept that compromise between coöperative effort and rugged individualism which is civilized life.

Anyone desiring further details concerning Mr. Kindergarten's plan may address him in care of the Kalamazoo Vegetable Parchment Company, Kalamazoo, Michigan.

SOME THINGS WE SHOULD TEACH

By HAYDN S. PEARSON

Principal, Bigelow Junior High School
Newton, Massachusetts

Condensed from The Christian Science Monitor, October 24, 1936.
Published in Boston, Massachusetts.

Let us as parents and teachers remember that while facts are necessary, we also need to teach many other things if boys and girls are to make this a higher type society than it now is.

We need to start with children. We give emphasis to great figures in history; our national leaders, explorers, and inventors. Let us give emphasis to the great in the realms of music and art. Let us teach our youth the beauty and joy of good music and art; let us make them familiar with such music and art, and the lives of the great composers and great painters. As adults, the youth of to-day will add their voices to the demand for better things.

We need to put more emphasis on the social graces. As teachers, by our example, we can teach perhaps more effectively than we can by talking. Children are natural imitators. It may be that as adults we do not consider enough the weight of example. Our life seems rushed to-day, but it is never too hurried for time to be kindly, thoughtful, and courageous.

Do we, as parents and teachers, help boys and girls to become conversable? Often a young person has failed to secure a good position because the employer, after trying to converse with the applicant, decided the applicant could not discuss ideas. We need more conversation in the classroom and home, and less re-citation of facts.

We need to teach good poise. The youth who is ill at ease in association with others is at a distinct disadvantage. We ought to teach boys and girls to shake hands with a firm, cordial grip.

It is frequently the things which officials choose to eliminate from the schools that tend to make the difference between an educated person and a cultured one. Of course we need to teach facts. But beyond facts there is a vast field that as yet has been too little emphasized. We need more, not less, teaching in the fields of art, music, and the social graces.

WHO ARE THE IGNORANT?

By OLIVER M. KEVE

Condensed from The American Scholar, Autumn, 1936, pp. 504-506.
Published by the United Chapters of Phi Beta Kappa, 145 West 55th Street, New York City.

What is culture? It is told of a certain trio who are members of a college faculty that they feel themselves to be the really cultured members of the faculty, the others being barbarians of varying but distinctly inferior degrees of culture. It is said that the conversation of these three is at times rather remarkable for display of knowledge. Their assumption of monopoly of the finer things of life, however, raises a serious question as to the validity of their claim. Every school-boy knows of the two men born in the same year, 1909. One was the child of a Liverpool merchant prince and as a mere youth was graduated with honors from Oxford University, after which he was given the benefit of wide travel and the best of cultural contacts. The other child first saw the light of day through the chinks of a log cabin in the Kentucky wilderness. How do giants grow? The careers of Gladstone and Lincoln indicate that this matter of education is a complex affair and that it is a mistake to classify people too easily as educated or uneducated.

"Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled." Peter and John were "uneducated men, with no advantages," according to the Goodspeed translation. Moffat renders the verdict of the onlookers in these words, "uncultured persons and mere outsiders." These disciples had spoken confidently, with evident force and convincing manner, but the speech came to be discounted when it was perceived that the men were uneducated—had not been regularly schooled. They were not within the inner circle and were catalogued as outsiders. What presumption for them to assume to instruct! They should instead have had an inferiority complex, according to their critics.

The founder of the school of journalism at the University of Missouri was Walter Williams, later president of the institution. He was not a college graduate, having left school at an early age to go to work in a printing office. Clyde Tombaugh, discoverer of the ninth major planet, Pluto, was a farmer boy interested in an amateur way in astronomy. The experts who had worked for years on the problem failed to find a planet where they felt one should be, but this almost unschooled lad succeeded.

Adaptability, initiative, industry, judgment of character, clear apprehension of duty, ability to bend circumstance to a dominating purpose, these are the essential qualities. Who is the untrained, the ignorant, the mere outsider? Is it not the one who theorizes and dreams but never accomplishes?

Surely it is the part of culture to welcome goodness and efficiency and accomplishment wherever found and without any deprecatory gesture, while we are at the same time promoting by every possible means the interests of formal education in all of the groups aspiring to leadership.

SCHOOLS IN TUNE WITH THE TIMES

By DR. HERBERT SCHOFIELD

Principal of Loughborough College, England

Condensed from The Rotarian, September, 1936, pp. 34-35.

Editorial Offices: 35 East Wacker Drive,
Chicago, Illinois.

The roots of our educational system lie in that intellectual revolution men call the Renaissance. This revolution, helped by the advent of modern science, did not take place, however, in a democratic world, but in one, at the best, of enlightened despotism.

Culture was the prerogative of the few, of the wealthy leisured class; and education aimed at the perpetuation of an aristocratic tradition, and found its best means of doing so in the study of the classics. The scholar became the hand of God turning the slow wheels of progress. It was such an educational tradition that found itself faced in the nineteenth Century with the problem of applying its technique to the education of the masses, and willy-nilly it has tried to force them to take the outer shape of the favored few who formally submitted to its discipline.

We are still trying to train men of leisure, orators, writers, and administrators, many of whom will never address an audience, write a sonnet or book, or govern an empire. It is this creation of what has been called an "intellectual proletariat" which is the real problem of the day.

Classical education was a child of its time. It flourished in a world of a leisured aristocracy and its acquisition was a cherished monopoly of those whose wealth and standing allowed them the opportunity to acquire it. As such, it led to a static universe whose sole object was perpetuation of the past. The new education must be dynamic and practical; so broad must be its sweep that all, not a few, achieve the results of its discipline.

Man is not a rational animal; he does not think before he acts, but acts, and then thinks. Out of his acts in a real world we must find all those interests which need fostering to enable him to develop all the multitudinous factors which go to make a capable man. Education should never be directed solely to make a student a gentleman, a mechanic, a farmer, or an artist, but simply a fully-developed man; but this does not mean that the aim cannot be achieved by, say, a course at an engineering or an agricultural college.

The majority of the students of our democratic world must be brought to thinking through doing. The main situations in life give us something to do, not something to learn, and when such situations result in a problem of intention, design or purpose, thought is stimulated, data derived from other experiences are drawn in, and with these and happy guesses a solution is achieved.

If we are to supply such experiences to students, it would seem that the college workshop, operating on a system of "training on production," offers untold opportunities to force them to undertake such unconscious dips into elementary logic. Extraneous detail passes on one side as evidence, is weighed and thought over, and although the whole process may never receive verbal formulation, it is there as surely as in any written exercise.

No one but a simpleton would hold that this type of training must be applied indiscriminately to all students, but it is obvious that it must be by such methods that we must approach many of them. It is time we renounced the prejudice against recognizing the educative possibilities in practical activities, although such prejudice is justified if nothing but practical activity results.

YOU CAN'T TRAIN THE INTELLECT BEFORE IT ARRIVES

By DR. BENJAMIN R. SIMPSON
Professor of Educational Psychology
Western Reserve University

Condensed from The Scientific Monthly, October, 1936, pp. 346-357.

It took Darwin to make it clear that man is an animal in every sense of the word, subject to the same biological laws of heredity and environments as other forms of life. The first man of genius to investigate the laws of inheritance in plants was Mendel. Some of the incontestable facts brought to light are that the wide range and the distribution of the differences found within a species under ordinary conditions are to be explained in terms of differences in heredity—differences in the chemical packets called chromosomes which are contained in the fertilized seed or egg from which the plant or animal developed.

As for the argument that a favorable environment may change a group or a nation to a cultural level far beyond that previously attained, the educator can agree most heartily. But this is beside the point. It does not touch the perplexing problem of individual differences at all. The improvement of the general average of a race as a whole does not bring about equal improvement for every member of the race or group. The moron is still in the finest educational system that any one has been able to devise. In fact, the intellectual differences between individuals become still wider as the educational opportunity is improved for all. The idiot remains an idiot, no matter what the environment in which he is reared, whereas the genius is able to capitalize fully upon his learning capacity only under conditions most favorable to the full exercise of his superb learning capacity. The damage is done by the implication that all infants are alike.

One wonders how long those, who behold the miracles that have been performed in plant cultivation and in animal breeding by the application of the principles of eugenics, will continue to stand aghast at the very thought of considering their possible application in human affairs in even the slightest degree. One wonders how long public lecturers, who readily admit the vast improvement which has taken place in stock raising by elimination of the most unfit by selective breeding, will continue to argue that it would be out of the question to improve the human race by the application of eugenic principles, because one does not know which are the best human beings and which are the poorest! One might hazard a guess that there are a few specimens whose pattern might be dispensed with without too much danger of loss on the part of future generations; and on the other hand that there are many whose progeny would stand well above the average in many desirable traits.

In the last fifty years, a large part of the possible improvement of intellect has already been accomplished. We are like the farmer who has drained the low spots on his farm, fertilized the barren places, and cultivated the whole farm to the best of his ability, but still continues to plant any old seed with never a thought as to the simple expedient of more judicious selection of the seed to be planted. He might, at least, decline to plant seeds most likely to prove harmful, or he might favor the selection of seed most likely to give rise to the more desirable products—assuming of course that the human product is worthy of at least as much consideration as strawberries or cattle.

It goes against the grain to believe that men are not born equal, but it is true beyond doubt. It is not abnormal to get a hand of bridge with a ten spot high occasionally, nor one at least three aces. Just such combinations may happen in the distribution of chromosomes, even when the chromosomes from which the selection is made are the same, as is true in the case of children of the same parents. Such combinations are the result of natural forces just as much as are the combinations which occur more frequently, but it does not follow that the most unfortunate combinations need be perpetuated eternally just because they occur, nor that the world's greatest assets deserve no thought toward their perpetuation.

WHAT IS A GENERAL EDUCATION?

By ROBERT MAYNARD HUTCHINS
President of the University of Chicago

Condensed from Harper's Magazine, November, 1936, pp. 602-609.

Published by Harper & Brothers,
40 East 33rd Street, New York City.

If education is rightly understood it will be understood as the cultivation of the intellect. The cultivation of the intellect is the same good for all men in all societies. It is, moreover, the good for which all other goods are only means. Material prosperity, peace and civil order, justice and the moral virtues are means to the cultivation of the intellect. An education which served the means rather than their end would be misguided.

If there are permanent studies which every person who wishes to call himself educated should master; if those studies constitute our intellectual inheritance, then those studies should be the center of a general education. They cannot be ignored because they are difficult or unpleasant or because they are almost totally missing from our curriculum to-day. The child-centered school may be attractive to the child, and no doubt is useful as a place in which the little ones may release their inhibitions and hence behave better at home. But educators cannot permit the students to dictate the course of study unless they are prepared to confess that they are nothing but chaperons, supervising an aimless, trial-and-error process which is chiefly valuable because it keeps young people from doing something worse. The free elective system as Eliot introduced it at Harvard and as the Progressive Education adapted it to lower age levels amounts to a denial that there was content to education. Since there was no content to education we might as well let students follow their own bent. They would at least be interested and pleased and would be as well educated as if they had pursued a prescribed course of study. This overlooks the fact that the aim of education is to connect the present with the past and to advance the thinking of the race. If this is the aim of education, it cannot be left to the sporadic, spontaneous interests of children or of undergraduates.

If this is the aim of education, the curriculum should be composed principally of the permanent studies because these studies draw out the elements of our common human nature. What are the permanent studies?

They are in the first place those books which have through the centuries attained to the dimensions of classics. A classic is a book that is contemporary in every age. That is why it is a classic. The conversations of Socrates raise questions that are as urgent to-day as they were when the society in which Plato lived. If we read Newton's Principia, we see a great genius in action; we make the acquaintance of a work of unexampled simplicity and elegance. We understand the basis of modern science. The false starts, the backing and filling, the wildness, the hysteria, the confusion of modern thought and the modern world result largely from the loss of what has been thought and done by earlier ages. Every educated person should know the colossal triumphs of the Greeks and Romans and the great thinkers of the Middle Ages. If every man were educated—and why should he not be?—our people would not fall so easily prey to the latest nostrums in economics, in politics, and, I may add, in education.

You will observe that the great books of the Western world cover every department of knowledge. The Republic of Plato is basic to an understanding of the law; it is equally important as education for what is known as citizenship. The Physics of Aristotle, which deals with change and motion in nature, is fundamental to the natural sciences and medicine, and is equally important to all those who confront change and motion in nature, that is, to everybody. Four years spent partly in reading, discussing, and digesting books of such importance would, therefore, contribute equally to preparation for specialized study and to general education of a terminal variety. It will also develop habits of reading and standards of taste and criticism that will enable the adult, after his formal education is over, to think and act intelligently about the thought and movements of contemporary life. It will help him to share in the intellectual activity of his time.

I do not suggest that learning the languages or the grammar in which the ancient classics were written is necessary to general education. Excellent translations of almost all of them now exist. Unless it can be shown that the study of Greek and Latin grammar is essential to the mastery of our own, I see no reason for insisting on these languages as part of general education. The modern languages of course are no necessary part of it.

If the object of general education is to train the mind for intelligent action, logic cannot be missing from it. Correctness in thinking may be more directly and impressively taught through mathematics than in any other way. It is depressing that in high schools and junior colleges it is not often taught in such a way as to achieve these ends. Arithmetic and geometry are there usually presented to the student as having great practical value, as of course they have. But I have had students in the freshman year in college who had never heard that they had any other value, and who were quite unwilling to consider mathematical questions until their practical possibilities had been explained. To this pass has our notion of utility brought us.

We have then for general education a course of study consisting of the greatest books of the Western world and the arts of reading, writing, and speaking, together with mathematics, the best exemplar of the processes of human reason. If our hope has been to frame a curriculum which educates the elements of our common human nature, this program should realize our hope. If we wish to prepare the young for intelligent action, this course of study should assist us; for they will have learned what has been done in the past and what the greatest men have thought. They will have learned how to think themselves. If we wish to lay a basis for advanced study, that basis is provided.

The National Honor Society Panel

PORTLAND, OREGON

Tuesday, June 30, 1936, 2 P. M.

Library Hall, Public Library

Mr. McClellan G. Jones, Principal of Union High School, Huntington Beach, California, and First Vice President of the Department of Secondary-School Principals, presiding:

I am going to ask the members of the panel to come to the platform at this time. Mr. M. R. McDaniel wired that due to illness, he is unable to be here. Mr. Church, Secretary of the National Honor Society, will be the discussion leader. I now turn the meeting over to Mr. Church, who will introduce the members of the panel.

MR. CHURCH: I fancy some are curious to know how this panel came into existence. Mr. McDaniel asked me to invite these people to take part in this panel discussion, and I think first these people better stand and introduce themselves, telling who they are and what schools they are from.

Isabelle T. Mann, Junior High School, Oregon City., Oregon.

Mabel A. Bennett, High School, Corvallis, Oregon.

R. W. Tavenner, High School, Salem, Oregon.

A. H. Pengra, Principal High School, Lebanon, Oregon.

MR. CHURCH: Is there anyone here who should like to ask some questions in regard to the National Honor Society and its practical workings? If there are such, and you have the courage to rise and state them, I will take great pains to direct your questions to the proper members of this panel.

MR. BRADY, lately Principal of the Junior High School, San Francisco: How long has it been since this organization has been functioning in junior high schools? We have never heard of it in San Francisco.

MISS MANN: I don't know how long it has been in other states, but in Oregon, our chapter is Alpha, and we organized in January, 1935. I think there are older organizations in junior high schools.

MR. CHURCH: You want to know when it began to function in junior high schools? The first junior charter was granted in 1929 to a high school in Webster Groves, Missouri.

MR. BRADY: How is the information sent out to junior high schools in other parts of the country? No information has been received in San Francisco.

MR. CHURCH: Your point is an indictment of the National Honor Society because it didn't let you know?

MR. BRADY: Yes, that is my point.

MR. CHURCH: Information of the organization comes through its programs at our national meetings and through the Bulletins of the Department of Secondary-School Principals.

MR. PENGRA: I would like to insert in this discussion at this point the fact that in the State of Oregon we have a state organization, and I believe Mr. Johnson of Eugene would be able to tell us briefly how that would affect this particular situation.

MR. HARRY B. JOHNSON, Eugene, Oregon: In Oregon we have what we call the State High-School Principals' Association, which had honor societies as one of its projects, and we have continued it as a project. We studied the different honor societies for various types of organization for two or three years before we decided on which type of organization we should adopt. Finally we settled on the National Honor Society, which has been sponsored by the Department of Secondary-School Principals, and stood for principles on which we all could agree, and since that time it just has propelled itself. Any publicity that has been given here has come through the meetings of our organizations throughout Oregon, the educational journal, and through the committee.

MR. JONES: I would like to ask you to present the principles that are the foundation of the National Honor Society.

MR. CHURCH: To state those briefly, I should say the National Honor Society was started to stimulate scholarship in the secondary schools of the country, and to endeavor to place secondary education on higher levels—higher and higher levels. This is done in two ways. We decided from the beginning to try to recognize character, service leadership, and scholarship in the students in the high schools, and in so doing to try to stimulate all members of the high schools to try to attain those attributes and those elements of high standing. The other way is that we try to impress on all members who are chosen and inducted into the society this feeling, that when one is elected into the National Honor Society, it is not only for his career in the secondary school, but it is for life, and that he as a student and a graduate of the high school, going out into life, will be held to the pledge as a member of the National Honor Society, no matter where he goes, no matter what he becomes—whether school board member, or teacher, or member of some political organization—to endeavor always to try to raise secondary education to higher and higher levels.

MR. FRED L. BIESTER, Glen Ellyn, Illinois: I would like to have someone tell how you pick people from the upper third of the class. What process is used?

MISS BENNETT: I am glad you asked that because that is one of the points I wanted to make at this meeting. I think that in the past we have stressed scholarship perhaps a little too much in the selection. We also count pupil activities; but we still haven't touched on two ideals of the society that are possibly the most important.

The choice based on the first two has been worked out; we can get the grades and the activities, but when you come to character and leadership, you come to real difficulties. Leadership can be put over into ratings just as we do with grades, but character is a little more difficult. In preparing for this I thought perhaps we might rate character as to reliability, honesty, willingness of service (service has been rated, but willingness of service is important), and possibly one or two other points. The sticking point in my mind is, shall we add the points gained by leadership and character to the points gained by scholarship and service, or shall we say that is done, and then just consider character and leadership?

MR. A. B. PARKER, Corvallis, Oregon: Limiting the membership to fifteen per cent of the graduating class prohibits the formation of an honor society in a small school. What can be done about that?

MR. CHURCH: Something has been done about that. There are optional sections in the constitution which allow in the small school members to be chosen from the sophomore classes—you may choose members from the sophomore, junior, and senior classes. Members of the sophomore classes are not allowed to hold office, but they may vote. Then, if they prove themselves worthy during their membership while sophomores, they become full-fledged members, being able to be elected to office, as juniors and seniors. In that way you have a larger working body.

MR. PARKER: With a graduation class of twenty-five or thirty, limiting it to fifteen per cent of the graduation class, you can't have a working body.

MR. CHURCH: That has been done away with. You set a dead line, say rating on the scale of "100" you choose "88" as the dead line. You say that anyone in this school can become eligible as far as scholarship is concerned by his own efforts if he raises himself above that dead line. Then half of the student body might thereby become eligible as far as scholarship is concerned for membership.

MR. OVERMAN, Modesto, California: Are we to assume, then, that, marks are a measure of scholarship?

MR. CHURCH: I regret we have to assume that if you wish to have an objective working basis.

MR. ROE, Grand Oaks, Washington: I would like to know what the honor society does, what its function is beside the honor of belonging to the society. What do they do in the school? What program do they carry out?

MR. TAVENNER: I have always taken the stand that there isn't any function, except identifying the ability of your student body. Our own society isn't very active as a society, but active as individuals in things already undertaken.

MISS BENNETT: I am sorry, but I don't agree with that. I think the honor society must justify itself by some activity, that is more or less relative to its ideals. They should have activities all their own. One activity that was suggested by one group is that there should be a kind of training for leadership. That, of course, could be expanded into character training, and I don't know but that could be worked into a round table in which different qualities of character and leadership are discussed. Let them come together and discuss problems of different societies. Let them meet and practice leadership. Certainly something could be worked out to justify an honor society.

MR. CHURCH: From the reports that come in from chapters, about fifteen per cent of the chapters look upon the organization as purely an honorary organization. In other words, they choose members at the close of the senior year, and it is an honor to be chosen. The other eighty-five per cent are very active, and it is a revelation to read the reports that come from all these groups all over the country, of what they are doing. I have been tabulating those at odd moments for the last two or three months, and I hope to prepare a list of them, and I assure you that if you see this list, you will be amazed at the different activities these young people enter into. One of the finest things is this: they meet with the sponsor, say twice a month or once a month, and say to each other, "What is it we can do as a unit to make this a better school?" You will find that all over the country they are doing it. Asking this question, putting it up to their sponsor—that is pure service,—but leadership and character come out. They talk it over with their sponsor, what they should do. When they are agreed upon an activity, the sponsor and a member, perhaps the president, go to the principal and say, "We should like to undertake this activity." If it meets with his approval, they launch it.

MR. DEAN GORDON: Can the National Honor Society be used as a factor in combating sororities and fraternities in the high schools?

MR. TAVENNER: We had the problem in Salem, and I think we did have certain individuals who had somewhat the idea that when the honor society was organized, it would discourage that sort of thing. What actually happened, I don't know. We haven't come out in the open in the fight, but probably it has set up some objectives, some ideals, that are working against that sort of thing.

MR. MALTBY, Spokane, Washington: I may not be correct, but I understand that only one high school in a city is allowed to have these honor societies. Is that right? If it is, why is that the condition?

MR. CHURCH: The answer is, "It is wrong." Each high school in a city may have a chapter.

MRS. FREESE, Eastern Oregon: I am not an educator; I am a parent. I wonder if honor societies are pedagogically sound, if awards and merits and high grades and things of that kind are pedagogically sound. Is it the purpose to train a few for leadership? Isn't the democratic ideal to train all for leadership? Everyone has an equal opportunity, I have been told. I swelled with pride when my child was elected to the honor society. I think it is in line with a medal or a cup or some other honor, but the newest education says we should get away from awards in order to stimulate our children to study.

MR. CHURCH: I think you are quite right. I think the National Honor Society might become a sort of aristocratic cult into which people are inducted. The fifteen per cent I spoke of, which looks upon it purely as an honorary society, I would put in that class. But when a group of young people have come together and discussed and stimulated themselves to raise their school to higher and higher levels, I think that sort of thing should be encouraged in the school. The modification I spoke of, whereby anyone can, through his scholarship, make himself eligible to the honor society, in part answers your criticism.

MR. OVERMAN, Modesto, California: I wish someone would tell us what the requirements for entering into the scholarship society are. I have heard them rather vaguely intimated, what they ought to be, but what are they at present?

MR. PENGRA: The requirements of the National Honor Society, according to the constitution given us by the national organization, are that an individual must be selected by a committee of the faculty. First of all, that individual must be in the upper third of his class by scholarship from the beginning of his high school career. Then upon that basis, we select those people who fall in the upper third. We place them on a list, and turn the list over to the teachers. The basis of scholarship has been taken care of in that way, and beyond that, it is only considered as the individual teacher sees that individual student. The other basis, and perhaps the one the teacher sees most, is the activity or service of that individual. The leadership and service activities overlap very considerably, and finally that little element of character, which is so intangible to many of us, enters in and we try to determine whether or not there is anything bad about Billy or Sally which would eliminate that individual from the honor society. That element of character must be so embedded into its youth that he or she will not go out into the community and be a disgrace.

MR. TAVENNER: That goes back to one of the biggest weaknesses of the high schools. The teachers do not know the pupils well enough, so anything we can do to help that will be worth while.

MR. A. D. GRAY, Mexico, Maine: We have the same problem; I take it it is more or less universal. By putting that scholarship column first it gives undue weight to scholarship over character. I think if we could have some objective measure, or some object appraisal, of character, and put character in the first column, the rest of the things would fall into the proper places, including scholarship.

MR. WILSON, Martinez, California: The tendency apparently in some elementary schools is to educate these parents with the idea that marks are somewhat of a counterfeit of education and hence in the elementary schools the tendency is to eliminate marks. Is not your society attempting to perpetuate something that the elementary school is attempting to indict?

MR. PENGRA: As far as many of us are concerned, the idea is to eliminate scholarship, as having to be in the upper tenth or some high rating of that kind. The upper third does indicate an element of scholarship.

MR. WILSON: We are telling these people that marks are unreliable, a matter of chance.

MR. CHURCH: I think they are unreliable. I look upon them something as a Government Crop Report, more or less to the point but not dependable absolutely.

MR. FRED L. BIESTER, Glen Ellyn, Illinois: I would like to raise this question, whether the students participate in this choice. That is of the greatest value in our own chapter. I know that Mr. Church will tell you that it won't work. It can be worked out so that it doesn't affect the constitutionality of it, but may I state this briefly so you will have the basis of what I am saying. Before we announce the upper one-third of our class, we have all of the seniors and all of the faculty cast a ballot that contains the name of every senior. There are three columns in which to cast judgment, as to whether the senior in their judgment has shown over the period of time in school a kind of citizenship and character that is above average or below average, and before we take the ballot we have at least three or four meetings of the seniors and explain what the three qualities other than scholarship are. We then combine those ballots under a process of grading which gives as a goal the score of "1." Now that thing has come to be of more value than any other phase of the honor society in our school. We have been able to focus the attention of the seniors on the elements involved. I would like to have discussed what are the possibilities of further student participation and the reaction to membership being announced on commencement night.

MR. H. S. PARKER, Corvallis, Oregon: I heartily agree with the gentleman that there should be student participation. Maybe I can explain a little what we do at Corvallis High School. We weren't satisfied with the subjective element in selecting our students for the honor society, so we gave grade points as far as scholarship is concerned. As you know, the basis is scholarship, leadership, character, and service, so in selecting as far as scholarship was concerned, we computed it on a grade-point average. From the service standpoint, we gave activity points for various offices and activities held in the school, so it wasn't hard to compute the activity points as far as the individual is concerned. Then leadership is also computed from that same element. Students that hold offices, of course, get a greater number of points than those that do not hold offices, but just hold memberships. Character, however, cannot be computed on an objective basis, but the sponsor meets with a committee that has been selected by the laymen of the society, and they go over the students having made the other three requirements, scholarship, leadership, and service.

If they find anything objectionable, they have to be specific what that is. The advisor of the organization then comes together with a committee of teachers, and she brings the recommendations from this committee of students on character. The other three have been computed, and the selection is then made on that basis.

As far as the activity of the organization is concerned, we do have activities for them, as described by Miss Bennett. We have two assemblies a year, one each semester, the finest assemblies that we have held in the school. The organization members also act as ushers during the annual school exhibit and on other special occasions. The teachers in various departments use them in helping the students, students who are having difficulty in their work. They act as student assistants at various times. That, of course, is a delicate situation and has to be handled tactfully by the teachers.

MISS BENNETT: May I add to Mr. Parker's remarks that when we had the students voice their opinions on the members to be chosen, their judgment very nearly coincided with that of the faculty, so their judgment was good.

MR. OVERMAN, Modesto, California: Suppose you had a boy who had received "A" in three subjects, say physical education, manual training and one other subject. In another subject, say special English, he went down to "C," or even "D." Would he be good material for the honor society?

MR. CHURCH: I would put it up to the faculty. I think the collective judgment of the faculty would be better on the matter. I would say this is a peculiar case.

MR. OVERMAN: This isn't a peculiar case; it is an ordinary case. If we are going to rank him by scholarship, he would not be accepted.

MR. CHURCH: The answer is that scholarship is at least only one-fourth. Service, leadership, and character are the other three-fourths.

MR. TAVENNER: That does bring up one of my most difficult problems. That boy would not come into contact with many of the faculty or members of the class. He would not be well known.

MR. OVERMAN: In a school of fifteen or sixteen hundred, with sixty-five or seventy in the faculty, one would be known by only four or five teachers. This is more or less true of most students; they are known by less than a dozen teachers, no more than a dozen. How would the whole faculty rate them?

MR. CHURCH: I wouldn't let someone who didn't know the boy at all pass judgment. If only twelve out of a group of seventy knew him, I would let them decide. Some of the faculty ought to have some knowledge of the boy, and I would put it up to them.

MR. OVERMAN: How are you going to get the comparison of the other members that you want? You have got a third of the membership of the class to vote on. Are you going to have all teachers vote on all?

MR. CHURCH: You aren't bound by one-third if you follow the optional sections I spoke about.

MISS BENNETT: We average them. If six teachers vote for one, we average, divide by six, and if twenty vote, we still find the average, realizing that some cannot meet so many teachers as others.

MISS MANN: Wouldn't that be a situation in which the judgment of the pupils might be used? The opinions of the students who are really acquainted with the child?

MR. CHURCH: Mr. Biester thinks I am old-fashioned, but I think it is wise to submit your list in some form or other to at least the senior group, if not the senior and junior group, not for blackball, but that they may make suggestions that would be well for the members of the faculty to consider.

MR. PENGRA: May I state that where members of our own National Honor Society have participated, it is rather instructional in one sense to members of the faculty committee to find out how they have rated certain individuals from the standpoint of both scholarship and character.

MARY LUCAS. Nampa, Idaho: I noted that one of the speakers said that he avoided certain difficulties incident to earlier election by announcing the election at commencement time. He did not say what those difficulties were. In our chapter we have met certain difficulties which I cannot throw sufficient light upon, perhaps as I have been sponsor only one year. It seems, however, that when the chapter was organized, a neighboring chapter initiated or installed our chapter, and before the regular installation ceremony, I think they put on some stunts, regular initiation stunts, somewhat similar to stunts put on by other organizations. Now each time that a group of our schools put on an initiation, they felt they must out do those stunts, and the matter has become quite a worry. I don't know whether any other school has had that trouble, but it has been quite a problem to impress upon those students that the honor society isn't a stunt society, and that the candidates were honor guests and not supposed to play horse for the rest of the organization. I hope that I may take back some concrete suggestions to show our chapters that isn't the way an up-to-date school did it. I would like to know what ceremonies, aside from the formal ceremony, are used, and to what extent anybody else has had trouble in this respect.

MR. CHURCH: You are first over the bar. From all my experience since the beginning of the National Honor Society (people don't reveal all their troubles, but they let me know of plenty of them) this is the first time I have ever heard of that. I should tell them they are unique in the history of the National Honor Society in these United States.

If there are no other questions, I will close. I know there are a great many educators who do not believe in the National Honor Society, who believe that it is unpedagogical, undemocratic,—and I was inclined to believe that when it first started out. I was principal at that time of a high school, and it was two or three years before we had a chapter. I sincerely questioned it, but I gradually grew to feel differently. I can see there are difficulties; I don't know of anything that is very good but what you have difficulties over it. I even have difficulties with a very fine woman, but I wouldn't do away with that institution.

(The meeting was declared adjourned by Mr. Jones.)

HARTSVILLE HIGH WAYS

Hartsville High Ways is a capital handbook for high-school students. It was prepared by the Senior and the Junior Chapters (Hartsville, South Carolina) of the National Honor Society. These chapters and their sponsors, Miss Helen Baker and Miss Katherine Lee, are complimented for their excellent handbook.

NATIONAL HONOR SOCIETY

About fifteen years ago the Department of Secondary-School Principals (then the National Association of Secondary-School Principals) organized the National Honor Society with the end in view of stimulating scholarship in the secondary schools of the United States. To-day there are more than two thousand chapters and these are in the best high schools in the country. The four objectives of the society are: to create an enthusiasm for scholarship, to stimulate a desire to render service, to promote worthy leadership, and to encourage the development of character. Every high-school principal who has a chapter is enthusiastic over the productive results of this organization in his school. Direct all requests for literature to H. V. Church, 5835 Kimbark Avenue, Chicago.

WARNING

The National Honor Society has met with such great success that imitations are springing up in different parts of the country. These pseudo honor societies seem to have largely a commercial objective, and plan to exploit scholarship for financial ends. Members of our department are warned to beware of any plan to sell pins or emblems to pupils under the guise of scholarship, and are urged not to lend their aid or influence to such organizations.

The Department of Secondary-School Principals recommends only the National Honor Society and the National Junior Honor Society.

PRICE LISTS

(Direct orders for the following to H. V. Church, 5835 Kimbark Avenue, Chicago.)

FIFTH PRICE LIST OF NATIONAL HONOR EMBLEMS

The prices of emblems were lowered during the summer of 1933, but the rising price of gold has made two subsequent increases necessary. Beware of unauthorized jewelers, their low prices, and their cheapened wares. The latest prices are below. ALL ORDERS SHOULD BE SENT ONLY TO THE NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS.

SENIOR EMBLEMS

14K Charm-----	$3.60	14K Pin-----	$2.75
10K Charm-----	3.00	10K Pin-----	2.30
Gold Filled Charm-----	1.60	Gold Filled Pin-----	1.00

(Our jewelers say gold filled pins will wear twenty years.)

ENGRAVING

Engraved letters or numerals, each 5c additional.

GUARDS

(If guard has more than one letter, or more than two digits, add twenty-five cents for each additional character.)

Guard (state letter or year) gold filled with chain-----	$1.00
Guard (state letter or year) 10K with chain-----	1.25
Guard (state letter or year) 14K with chain-----	1.50

Allow ten days' time for letters or special numerals, twice the time in rush seasons.

These are remittance-with-order prices, and are postpaid. Add ten cents an emblem to the above prices if C. O. D. handling is desired. The C. O. D. fee is 25c up to $10.00; 30c up to $50.00; and to this should be added the 25c messenger service, besides the money order fee. It is too expensive to order C. O. D. Do not do it.

ALL ORDERS SHOULD BE SENT ONLY TO THE NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS.

RINGS

Large (Boys) 14K-----	$9.00	Small (Girls) 14K-----	$8.50
Large (Boys) 10K-----	7.50	Small (Girls) 10K-----	7.00

SEALS AND MEMBERSHIP CARDS

Membership Cards—Since the organization of the National Honor Society there has been a growing demand for membership cards in the organization. Cards of membership, both for members of the National Honor Society and for the members of the National Junior Honor Society are now on sale. The cards ( $2\frac{1}{2} \times 2\frac{3}{4}$ ") are engrossed on a fine quality of cardboard, have the emblem of the Society embossed upon them, and require only the insertion of the name of the member.

The price of the cards is five cents apiece.

Seals—The Seal ( $1\frac{1}{4} \times 1\frac{1}{4}$ ") is a gilt embossed sticker to be affixed on the diplomas of members of chapters. A replica of the emblem is embossed on the seal.

The price of the seals is five cents apiece.

NATIONAL HONOR MEMBERSHIP CERTIFICATES

In response to repeated demands, the Department of Secondary-School Principals has prepared membership certificates ( $8\frac{1}{2} \times 11$ ) for members of the National Honor Society. These certificates are lithographed on artificial parchment with the die of a facsimile of the emblem stamped in gold. They sell for fifteen cents apiece post-paid.

ENGRAVED STATIONERY

So many requests for National Honor stationery have come in that a supply is now on hand to meet the demands. This writing material is designed for the use of members and sponsors of the chapters of the National Honor Society. The engraved letterheads with envelopes to match come in two sizes with prices as follows:

48 engraved sheets, $7\frac{1}{4} \times 10\frac{1}{2}$	{ ----- \$1.00
48 envelopes, $3\frac{3}{8} \times 7\frac{1}{2}$	{ ----- \$1.00
48 engraved folded note sheets, $6\frac{1}{2} \times 10\frac{1}{2}$	{ ----- \$1.00
48 envelopes, $3\frac{3}{8} \times 9\frac{1}{2}$	{ ----- \$1.00

These prices are post-paid. Remittance should accompany order, and orders must be approved by principal or by sponsor. Samples are sent on request.

PLAQUES

A bronze wall plaque has been designed and manufactured. Schools that have chapters of the National Honor Society will now have the opportunity of having this plaque. It consists of a solid bronze casting mounted on a walnut back. The size is thirteen by sixteen inches and the weight is ten pounds. A chain is furnished. All lettering, as well as the name of the school chapter and the emblem, is raised and polished above the bronze background.

The price is $30.00, which includes transportation and packing.

THE NATIONAL JUNIOR HONOR SOCIETY

The National Junior Honor Society is patterned very closely after the Senior Honor Society. The Junior Society is designed for ninth and tenth grades in four year high schools, and for eighth, ninth, and tenth grades in junior high schools. There are more than two hundred chapters in senior high schools and junior high schools. The national constitution, the model constitution, and material of information as well as the application blank will be sent on request.

EMBLEM, NATIONAL JUNIOR HONOR SOCIETY

The emblem is made in two grades: ten karat gold and gold filled. All pins have safety catch. The prices are as follows:

10K Pin.....	$1.60	Gold Filled Pin.....	$1.00
--------------	--------	----------------------	--------

These are remittance-with-order prices, and are post-paid. Add ten cents an emblem to the above prices if C. O. D. handling is desired. Engraved letters 5c each additional; guard with chain one dollar additional. If a guard is ordered, be sure to state whether a numeral, as '33 or '34, or an initial, is desired. (The C. O. D. fee is 25c up to $10.00; 30c up to $50.00; and to this should be added 25c messenger service, besides the money order fee. It is too expensive to order C. O. D. Do not do it.)

CERTIFICATES, NATIONAL JUNIOR HONOR SOCIETY

These certificates ( $7 \times 8\frac{1}{2}$ ") are engraved on artificial parchment with a die of a facsimile of the emblem embossed in gold. They sell for ten cents apiece post-paid. Send remittance with order.

SEALS

The seals are in blue and gold, the colors of the Junior Society, and are priced at five cents.

PLAQUES, NATIONAL JUNIOR HONOR SOCIETY

A bronze wall plaque has been designed and manufactured. Schools that have chapters of the National Junior Honor Society will now have the opportunity of having this plaque. It consists of a solid bronze casting mounted on a walnut back. The size is thirteen by sixteen inches and the weight is ten pounds. A chain is furnished. All lettering, as well as the name of the school chapter and the emblem, is raised and polished above the bronze background.

The price is $30.00, which includes transportation and packing.

POSTAL INSURANCE

Purchasers should bear in mind that all our merchandise placed in the mails is covered by insurance. Please report loss or damage in carriage of any purchase. Every shipment carries the following notice:

POSTAL INSURANCE

This parcel is insured

If the property contained in this package is damaged or any part of the contents lost, please report the extent of loss or damage at once to the Department together with the original wrapper of the parcel.

This insurance covers all parcels shipped by the Department of Secondary-School Principals, whether mailed first class, registered, unregistered, or parcel post.

Send all reports of loss with the original wrapper of the package to

CERTIFICATES OF RECOMMENDATION

The Department of Secondary-School Principals has been distributing uniform certificates of recommendation for over ten years. At first they were sent out free to the members of the Department, but the demand for the certificates became so great that the printing and mailing charges became a burden to the treasury. Therefore, a change was made.

The blanks are used in transferring pupils from one secondary school to another and particularly from high school to college. The certificates are sent post-paid at the following prices:

NEW PRICE LIST

Mailing from	100	200	500	1000
Chicago
1st zone	$1.60	$2.70	$6.10	$10.10
2nd zone	1.60	2.70	6.15	10.15
3rd zone	1.65	2.75	6.25	10.25
4th zone	1.65	2.75	6.45	10.50
5th zone	1.70	2.85	6.55	10.65
6th zone	1.70	2.90	6.65	10.90
7th zone	1.75	2.90	6.80	11.15
8th zone	1.75	2.95	7.10	11.40

Twenty per cent discount to dues-paying members.

STANDARD HIGH-SCHOOL PERSONAL RECORD BLANKS

The standard record forms which were approved by the Department of Secondary-School Principals at the meeting at Boston are now printed on cardboard suitable for vertical filing systems. This card, 5x8, is especially designed for small and medium size high schools.

Space is provided on these blanks for scholarship records for five years. The extra year is included for pupils of four-year high schools who may desire to do graduate work. It is recommended that six-year junior-senior high schools use separate cards for the records of the junior and of the senior schools.

When the guidance information called for in the lower right hand corner seems to be of a changeable nature, as would often be true of such items as "Vocational Preference" it is suggested that it be written in pencil so that it can be erased and changed when necessary.

The schedule of prices, post-paid, follows:

NEW PRICE LIST
Zones	100	200	500	1000
1 & 2	$1.70	$3.00	$6.00	$11.00
3	1.75	3.05	6.10	11.15
4	1.80	3.10	6.20	11.35
5	1.85	3.15	6.30	11.55
6	1.90	3.20	6.45	11.70
7	1.95	3.30	6.60	11.95
8	2.00	3.40	6.75	12.10

Twenty per cent discount to dues-paying members.

POSTAL INSURANCE

Members should keep in mind that all our merchandise placed in the mails is covered by postal insurance. Please be prompt in sending in notice of loss or damage in transit of any purchase. Every shipment contains the following:

POSTAL INSURANCE

This parcel is insured

If the property contained in this package is damaged, or any part of the contents lost, please report the extent of loss or damage at once to the Department together with the original wrapper of the parcel.

This insurance covers all parcels shipped by the Department of Secondary-School Principals, whether mailed first class, registered, unregistered, or parcel post.

Send all reports of loss with the original wrapper of the package to

THE DEPARTMENT OF SECONDARY-SCHOOL PRINCIPALS
5835 Kimbark Avenue, Chicago

GROUP LIFE INSURANCE

The Department offers to its members life insurance in its most inexpensive form. The salient features of the plan are:

1. Low premium.
2. No medical examination (with exceptions).
3. Total and permanent disability benefits. If an insured member becomes totally and permanently disabled, his insurance will be paid in monthly installments.
4. Conversion privilege. When an insured member leaves the profession to enter another profession or economic group, he may convert his group policy into any of the policies (except term insurance) customarily issued by the insurance company for the same amount at the current rates of the attained age.
5. Age limit is sixty-five years.
6. Individual policies. These show rights of insured, amount, and beneficiary.
7. Current protection. There are no savings, accumulation, or paid-up features. Insurance is for one year at a time, and is renewable each year, at the option of the insured member.
8. Amounts offered: $3,000 for all ages from 21 to 47 (nearest birthday) inclusive. $1,500 for all ages from 47 to 65 (nearest birthday) inclusive.

AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE

The members of the Department who own motor cars may now procure complete, sound automobile insurance protection with efficient nation-wide service at annual savings to our members.

Send for application blank, to H. V. Church, 5835 Kimbark Avenue, Chicago.

If you will fill the application blank and send it to the Executive Secretary, he will quote the special rate to members. When you receive this quotation, you can then decide if you can save money by accepting this special rate.

FIRE INSURANCE

A new service, fire insurance, is now open with reduced rates to our members. If you are interested, send for a blank to the Executive Secretary, H. V. CHURCH, 5835 Kimbark Avenue, Chicago. The secretary will be glad to give you quotations.

OTHER INSURANCE

Perhaps the Department can effect you a saving in the following kinds of insurance: Accident, Earnings Replacement, Indemnity, Sickness, and any other type of coverage on insurance.

Write for information on insurance to H. V. CHURCH, 5835 Kimbark Avenue, Chicago.

THE BOOK-OF-THE-QUARTER CLUB

This is a new project undertaken by the Department of Secondary-School Principals in the hope that the secondary-school administrators will be stimulated to read the best professional books as they come from the press.

Every schoolman must, if he hopes to be successful, keep abreast of the times. Many books in our field issue from the press each year. Of these you should read at least four every twelvemonth. A Reviewing Board composed of the leaders in our sector of education will select for you the best professional book of each quarter. This Board consists of:

CHARLES H. JUDD, Chairman
University of Chicago

FRANCIS L. BACON,
Superintendent
Township High School
Evanston, Illinois

GRAYSON N. KEFAUVER
Stanford University

LEONARD V. KOOS
University of Chicago

THOMAS H. BRIGGS,
Teachers College
Columbia University

JOSEPH ROEMER
Peabody College for Teachers

THE BOOK-OF-THE-QUARTER CLUB

of the

Department of Secondary-School Principals

The books of the Club covering the year will be billed each quarter at 25% off to dues-paying members, 20% to others. An additional dividend, reckoned on the Rochdale plan, will be paid during the summer quarter to dues-paying members.

Fill in blanks, check beginning date, tear off at dotted line, and mail to

A NEW COMBINATION OFFER

To members of the Department of Secondary-School Principals.

Consumers Union is an organization that has grown out of the strike difficulties of Consumers Research. Many of our members are familiar with service offered by the latter group; these will be glad that a favorable combination arrangement has been made with Consumers Union. Both Consumers Union and Consumers Research have a price of three dollars for their best annual service. This three dollar service of Consumers Union can now be offered to our members in renewal (or new) subscription to the Department as follows:

Department membership, annual.....$2.00

Consumers Union, annual service.....$3.00

Both for $3.50. Send subscriptions to

H. V. CHURCH, Executive Secretary

5835 Kimbark Avenue, Chicago

I hereby subscribe for full membership in the Department of Secondary-School Principals and to the complete service of Consumers Union, both for one year, for which I inclose my remittance of $3.50.

Book Notices

Wilson, Frank T., Ph.D. Guiding Our Children. New York: Globe Book Company, 1935. Pp. 248. $2.00. Copy obtainable on approval from the publishers.

As implied in the subtitle, "Helping Children to Find and Face Reality," this book will be of great interest and help not only to parents but to teachers as well. It includes detailed discussions of the physical, mental, and spiritual needs of children from babyhood up to and including the period of adolescence with special emphasis on guidance—coöperative, intelligent, and consistent.

Following each of the fifteen chapters of the book is given listings of many good reference works for further help in child guidance.

McConathy, Beatty, Morgan. Music Highways and Byways: The Music Hour Series. New York: Silver Burdett Company, 1936. Pp. 252. $1.48.

Arranged in twenty units, this volume opens up new vistas of educating young people of junior high-school age in and through superb music.

The unique presentation of the many songs selected from folk literature as well as from the works of great composers of various ages enables children to learn history, geography, history of music, the fundamentals of composition, dancing, and even drama. A list of correlated records and a bibliography of travel literature and many beautiful illustrations complete the work.

The variety of voice arrangements include: unison, SA, SSA, SAAT, SAB, SAA-TB. A tone-blending drill is given with each song.

Maxwell, C. R. and Kilzer, L. R. High-School Administration. Garden City, N. Y.: Doubleday, Doran & Co., Inc. Pp. 514, 1936. $2.50.

This volume is written primarily for use by educational workers who aspire to the high-school principalship, and, by those who, having become high-school principals, wish to become better ones. It should prove of value in connection with teacher-training courses in high-school administration and management, as well as in connection with in-service education of teachers and administrators. The exercises and problems given at the end of each of the twenty-seven chapters may be used to afford both stimulus and direction for intensive research and worthwhile reports in classes or in faculty discussions.

The newer concepts in education which should guide a staff responsible for the education of youth have been emphasized by the authors, who have endeavored to relate theory and practice in a way that will enable those reading the volume to discern the connection of present situations with more desirable situations.

Bigelow, Maurice A. Sex Education. New York: The American Social Hygiene Association, pp. 307. $1.00, revised edition.

As defined by the author, sex education in its largest sense includes "all scientific, ethical, social, and religious instruction and influence which directly or indirectly may help young people to solve for themselves the problems of sex that inevitably come in some form into the life of every normal human individual," the ultimate goal being the ideal marriage.

After discussing the many problems confronting all people, the author offers definite aims or means through which these serious life problems may be intelligently attacked by education. Of course, in his opinion, the most important factor in the success of sex education is the teacher. Five serious disqualifications are mentioned: (1) Embarrassed teachers; (2) Abnormal teachers; (3) Teachers who accentuate sexual abnormality; (4) Pessimistic teachers; and (5) Teachers not respected by pupils.

The book is primarily for general readers, parents, teachers, ministers, and students. It is an excellent source of material for students desiring to trace the history of the sex education movement in America, the extensive bibliography as well as the liberal number of quotations from various books and periodicals being invaluable for the purpose.

Giles, Imogene Kean. Occupational Civics. New York: The Macmillan Company, 1936. Pp. x-390.

The purpose of this book is to help the teacher in the task of guiding boys and girls in their choice of a vocation, in their plan for education and for leisure time, and in their effort to achieve high ideals in citizenship and in character. In regard to occupations, only enough facts are used to give a general picture. In these the worker rather than the work is emphasized.

The study of civics is approached from the point of view of the workers in government. Besides this, there is a bit of civics in almost every chapter.

Because of the admitted value of dramatization in education some playettes will be found in this book. These are intended as patterns so that groups of pupils may prepare others for use in class. The whole book takes the adventurous view of life.

The following sentence from the preface of Without Armor by James Hilton, helped to confirm the author's opinion that that attitude was not mere sentimentality:

"With all its drawbacks, the romantic and adventurous view of life is the most sensible. Whatever things are false, these at least are true,—the fervor of youth, . . . the thrill of danger, the splendor of achievement.

Bishop, Robinson, Walker. Map Work and Study Guide to accompany Muzzey's "A History of Our Country." New York: Ginn and Company, 1936. Pp. 96. 56c.

This work is divided into eight units corresponding to the eight units in Muzzey's textbook. Each unit is furnished with a preview of the period to be studied and with an outline of that particular section of American history.

A useful feature of this book is the large group of Suggestive Questions for Map Tests. In addition to the syllabus, the study outline, the provision for notebook work, and time chart, there are maps of all kinds with the new idea of showing the various ways of travel by land, water, and air.

Cozens, Trieb, and Neilson. Physical Education Achievement Scales for Boys in Secondary Schools. New York: A. S. Barnes and Company, Inc., 1936. Pp. vi-155. $1.60.

A valuable volume for teachers and administrators interested in obtaining information, scientifically measured, about the capacities of their pupils—information which will enable them to provide an activity program better adapted to pupil needs.

More than 56,000 records were obtained from the junior and senior high schools of Los Angeles as a basis for the achievement scales contained herein.

Schloring, Raleigh and Clark, John R. Mathematics in Life.

New York, Yonkers-on-Hudson: World Book Company, 1935. Pp. iv-44, illustrated.

This new type of material presents mathematics in a fascinating light for the non-mathematical minded student as well as for those of higher aptitudes in secondary or junior high school.

Much of the content is in story form, giving interesting sidelights on mathematics in life through all eras of human progress. A course so enlivened gives ample opportunity for making clear the meaning of mathematics in life and should prove a delight to student and teachers alike.

Stone, John C. and Mallory, Virgil S. A First Course in Algebra. New York: Benj. H. Sanborn & Co., 1936. Pp. vii-510, 57.

This text meets all the requirements of modern courses of study in algebra. The development is psychological: each new topic is based on material familiar to the pupil, and he is prepared for every new difficulty that he may meet in the new topic. This development is followed by a set of exercises (with answers) so that the pupil may "test his own understanding" of the explanations given in the text. Finally the new skills are fixed by a set of practice exercises fully adequate in number and graded in difficulty. The testing program provided insures the maintenance of skills.

Pangburn, Weaver Weddell. Adventures in Recreation. New York: A. S. Barnes & Company, 1936. Pp. 138. 72 cents.

This book is suited for use as a text or for collateral reading in junior and senior high-school courses in social sciences, physical education, civics, and allied subjects.

The author shows not only what recreation is, what the national recreation movement is, and to what extent this life-enriching activity is a governmental function, but also outlines what you have a right to expect from your community, and how you can contribute to the community's needs.

Buros, Oscar K. Educational Psychological and Personality Tests of 1933, 1934, and 1935. New Jersey, New Brunswick: School of Education of Rutgers University, 1936. Pp. 83. 50 cents a copy; 10 or more, 40 cents.

This cumulative issue of test bibliographies for 1933, 1934, and 1935, is published to meet the needs of test users and technicians in locating available tests. Hereinafter, the publication will be issued annually. The tests and references listed are comprehensive in scope, and the volume carries a complete publishers' directory and index as well as an index of authors and titles.

Adler, Alfred, Editor-in-Chief. International Journal of Individual Psychology. Chicago: International Publications, Inc., Second Quarter, 1936. Pp. 123.

Contains twelve essays concerning many case histories and their scientific diagnoses and treatment as related by noted authorities on Individual Psychology, who prove that most human ills and personality maladjustments arise from human discouragement—which is rooted in the individual's failure or fear of failure in meeting the major problems of life, namely, work, community, love. By revealing the causes of this discouragement, Individual Psychology is enabled to aid the patient to recognize his faulty life-style, and then to assist him in overcoming it—the method used being that of encouragement.

In addition to the revelations of scientists Alfred Adler, Alexander Neuer, Sofie Lazarfeld and others, contained in the Journal, there is also a supplementary section of book reviews as well as the usual listing of literature on Individual Psychology.

Adler, Alfred, Editor-in-Chief. International Journal of Individual Psychology, Third Quarter, 1936. Chicago: International Publications, Inc. Pp. 111. Subscription: $5.00 a year, send for details describing seven-day free reading offer.

There are three relationships in which every human being is unavoidably involved: society, work, and sex. His attitude toward these relationships constitute his life-conduct, according to Ferdinand Birnbaum in "Some Principles to be Observed in a Healthy Conduct of Life," one of nine essays in this issue of The Journal.

These "principles" are: (1) The principle of sovereignty, which includes the obligation to assume full responsibility for oneself, necessitating a correct knowledge of oneself; (2) The principle of solidarity, which means that our behavior is correct only when it takes into account the common natural ties existing among all human beings; (3) The principle of initiative, which is the opposite of waiting, although certain types of waiting are compatible with initiative; (4) The principle of productiveness, turning away from sham and turning toward usefulness; and (5) The principle of meliorism, the belief that the world is becoming better and that man has the power to add to its betterment.

This then leads us, according to the author, to the last and decisive point of proper life-conduct, the one criterion for which is: whether I am ready at all times to impart happiness.

The prescription of such an aim may sound simple; but is it not a fact that the greatest things in the world astound us by their simplicity?

Wallin, J. E. Wallace. Personality Maladjustments and Mental Hygiene. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Company, Inc. Pp. 511, 1935. Price?

In defining mental hygiene, the author states, "Mental hygiene represents the application of a body of hygienic information and technique, culled from the sciences of psychology, child study, education sociology, psychiatry, medicine, and biology treating (1) The problem of the preservation and improvement of the mental health of the individual and of the community, and (2) The problem of the prevention and cure of minor and major mental diseases and defects and mental, education, and social maladjustments."

The problems of the preservation as well as of the regaining of mental health pertain to all levels, kinds and classes of human beings: the young and the old; the normal and the abnormal; those apparently healthy and those obviously sick; those who suffer from major mental disorders, and those subject to minor or apparently trivial mental disabilities or twists.

The task of the mental hygienist is to lead each individual to achieve his highest development through an adequate understanding of his own nature, of his own mental mechanisms, through the formation of proper attitudes, ideals, and habit patterns, and through a continuous process of inner adjustment and integration.

The author's point of view on the fundamental philosophical question of the relation of the mental and the physical in mental health conservation is that the human organism is conceived as a highly complex ensemble of mental and physical traits and functions that are inextricably intertwined and interdependent; that these factors exert a reciprocal influence upon one another and are mutually affected by numerous environmental and hereditary influences which conduce toward mental soundness or unsoundness.

If the assumption is correct that the body and the mind are mutually interdependent, and interacting aspects of a single organism, it logically follows that any program for the attainment and maintenance of mental health that neglects either the mental or the physical factors is incomplete and unsatisfactory.

After studying the autobiographies of maladjustments herein presented, the conviction grows that the child acquires many if not most of his reaction patterns, basic conceptions, ideas, and ideals, and many of his abnormalities and maladjustments from his parents and teachers. The slogan has become almost hackneyed that the problem of problem children is more a problem of problem parents and problem teachers.

"Know thyself" in order to control thyself is a sound mental hygiene concept. "To make oneself known to oneself is the beginning and the end of cure." Objective self-discovery free from emotional distortions is valuable not only for the cure, but also for the prevention of mental illness—the desired goal for all people being the maintenance or the acquirement of the wholesome personality.

Miessner, W. Otto. A Guide to Symphonic Music. New York: Silver Burdett Company, 136. Pp. 90. $1.00.

Herein are analyses of famous symphonic works as follows: three dance suites, three symphonies, and four overtures from Haydn, Mozart, Handel, Bach, Beethoven, Weber, Wagner, and Strauss, so organized as to require two supplementary teaching aids, namely, two slotted charts for use on a phonograph. Various themes and sections can thereby be repeated for study at will.

The method should enable students, teachers, and music lovers to gain a more intimate understanding of the evolution, development, and form of symphonic music, the highest form of instrumental composition.

Beale, Howard K. Are American Teachers Free? Report of the Commission on the Social Studies, Part XII, American Historical Association. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1936. Pp. 856.

This volume should be on the "must read" list of every teacher.

The revelations contained herein are the result of an exhaustive analysis of the restraints upon teaching in American schools, the facts of which constitute an admonition and a challenge to all teachers to rouse themselves from their ignorance, indifference, or fear of dismissal or other forms of reprisal with which teachers are threatened. Arrived at by the questionnaire method, by personal interview and correspondence, the facts reveal not only the complete lack of freedom among teachers but their tendency to be unaware of the world outside their textbooks and schoolrooms. Most of them do not realize they are not free and they do not seem to care, according to the author.

To give a detailed account of the multifarious influences, the extra- and intra-scholastic pressures that are ever at work openly and undercover to control the schools would exceed the limits of this review, but they are present in appalling numbers. Among these, perhaps the most dangerous, because the most general and most subtle, is business. Some of the shibboleths by which business translates its economic desires without stating its purposes are "the public good", "Americanism", "rugged individualism", or even "patriotism", and thus through altruistic and benevolent sounding phrases, it uses its power over the schools and wherever else it can to save its own pocketbook.

Among the various factors that destroy freedom, the educational factor looms large for the responsibility it places on the teachers themselves. In the words of the author, "A teacher who sets out as most teachers do to dictate the child's thoughts, to teach him what is right and what is wrong to do or believe, has himself no conception of intellectual freedom. If more children were taught to think, to analyze, to form intelligent judgments of their own, more of those same children, when they become a part of the school's public, would hold ideals of freedom of judgment for the teacher."

In the assertion, "The teacher's lack of a social philosophy is one of the greatest factors in the problem of freedom", lies food for thought. And further, the author again places much of the responsibility of increasing freedom on the educators themselves when he says, "Teachers must be stimulated to an interest in social and economic problems. . . If the whole teaching profession were vitally interested in a solution of the world's problems their force would sweep all criticism and repressions aside."

Pointing to Progressive Education as one of the greatest forces for freedom of the teacher yet to appear in modern education, the author states, "Teachers in ideological bondage can do service for forces seeking to perpetuate the present social and economic order without change, but it takes free men and women to lead in the creation of a progressively better society."

The important question now is: Dare society face the consequences of not permitting the teachers of the next generations complete freedom?

Marshall, Leon C. and Goetz, Rachel Marshall. Curriculum-Making in the Social Studies. Part XIII: Report of the Commission of Social Studies, American Historical Association. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1936. Pp. xvii-252.

The social studies must go beyond the aspiration of helping youth merely to understand the social order in which their lives will be lived, they must be the means of assisting all individuals to an intelligent participation in an evolving society, a participation with intent to control it—at least in the sense of manipulation. This is the essential task herein allotted for accomplishment.

This complex task is not evaded by accepting a policy of drift, for, the authors declare, "The school system does not while drifting cease subtly to mold its charges. No teacher, no school administrator, no member of a school board, no legislator, no textbook writer makes a significant decision without influencing the situation. To hide our heads in the sands of evasion is useless. The task must be approached with an awareness of both its significance and its difficulties."

The material in this volume is arranged so that it may be of service in connection with the presentation of the social studies in the schools. The idea behind the book, however, is much broader. It is something more than a basis of curriculum proposal; it is a social theory.

The book comprises twenty-one chapters devoted to an analysis of the social scene and man's relationship to it as well as to feasible means of attaining the fullest practicable understanding of our social order; to a meaningful realization of the ways in which the individual, both pupil and adult, may participate effectively in that order; and to motivation for effective participation.

Hanna, Paul R. Youth Serves the Community. New York: D. Appleton-Century Company, 1936. Pp. 296. $2.00.

Here is presented the results of a survey of projects and activities of young people for community improvement. In the introductory statement, Dr. William H. Kilpatrick of Columbia University gives an admirable analysis of the underlying philosophy of coöperative activities for community improvement.

Chapter I, entitled "A Challenge to Educational and Social Leadership," gives the motive which resulted in the survey and the publication of the volume. "Children and youth, millions of them the world over, restless with tremendous energies! Communities, thousands of them from Pole to Pole, embracing the conditions and the materials from which we may create a far more ideal environment for better living! On the one hand, the great energy of youth requiring only a dynamic purpose to make that force the most constructive factor in social progress. On the other hand, cultures rich in potentialities, needing a great constructive force in order to realize the abundant human life which they are capable of providing. To coördinate these two mighty resources—to harness the energy of youth to the task of progressively improving conditions of community life—that is the supreme challenge to educational and social statesmanship."

The remainder of the book is a summary of what children and youth are doing at the present time and have done during the depression years in this country and abroad to improve social conditions. Hundreds of projects and activities are reported. These are organized under the following divisions: Youth Contributes to Public Safety; Youth Contributes to Civic Beauty; Youth Contributes to Community Health; Youth Contributes to Agricultural and Industrial Improvement; Youth Contributes to Civic Arts; Youth Contributes to Local History, Surveys and Inventories, and Protection of Resources; Youth in Foreign Countries Contributes to Socially-Useful Work; The Survey Challenge to Educational Leadership.

This book will be found practical and stimulating for all persons concerned with constructive activities of young people. As a source for new ideas for projects which young people may profitably carry out for improving their communities, the volume is unequalled.

Morgan, Joy Elmer. Horace Mann, His Ideas and Ideals. Washington, D. C.: National Home Library Foundation, 1936. Pp. 150. 25c.

The aim of this little volume is to provide an introduction to both the life and writings of Horace Mann. During 1936-37 the 100th anniversary of Horace Mann's coming to the secretaryship of the first state board of education will be celebrated throughout the country. This little book is part of that celebration.

Horace Mann gave his life to the improvement of education. He helped to lay the foundation for the Century of Progress in Education which the Celebration commemorates. The Chapters in the book on Horace Mann's Life, The Lectures on Education, The Letters to School Children, and His Ideas and Ideals, show the significant part he played in the pioneer development of education in America. The book will appeal to parents, taxpayers, high-school students, teachers: to all who would understand the full significance of universal free public education.

Raleigh Schloring and Howard Y. McClusky, Education and Social Trends. Yonkers-on-Hudson, New York: World Book Co., 1936. Pp. vi+154.

This little volume contains a brief introduction and eleven chapters treating in a popular way certain important social problems and the significance of these problems to present-day education. School principals, classroom teachers, and laymen will find the chapters valuable in presenting a general picture of changes and tendencies in our mode of life to which school curriculums must be adjusted. Additional reading is suggested in connection with each chapter and questions and problems are proposed to stimulate thought and discussion.
